Skating park complex in the works

Project would cost $60K

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The recreation commission is hoping to roll out the red carpet for an outdoor skateboard and in-line skating recreation complex in Cohasset.

Recreation department director Jack Worley said the town hopes to build a skateboard park with an 80-feet-by-100-feet in-line skating rink at the gravel pits off North Main Street behind the Little League field. There's only one problem: money. The complex could cost more than $60,000 depending on the size of the facility and the kind of equipment purchased. That's $60,000 the town doesn't have at this time. Worley said the town will probably have to seek private funding or public grants.

No one is sure exactly how many people in Cohasset use skateboards and in-line skates. Skateboarding enjoyed great success in the 1970s before fading into the background. But skateboards have resurfaced in the 1990s, especially with teenagers. Skateboarding has even gained some respectability as a competitive sport, which ESPN televises on cable.

In-line skates have become popular with everyone from families to professional hockey players. But there are few recreational facilities on the South Shore that cater to "roller-bladers"

James Lane dispute may end Monday

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The controversy over whether a Pleasant Street resident should be allowed to use James Lane as an access road to his home could end on Monday when the case goes to trial in Norfolk Superior Court. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the case is scheduled to go to trial on Monday morning at 9 a.m. Haddad said he hoped the case could be resolved quickly so the town could install a barrier at the end of James Lane and close off the street once and for all.

In 1995, the town blocked off James Lane with large rocks. But in 1996, a judge ordered the town to remove the rocks after Edward Fitzpatrick took the town to court.

James Lane is a small, 100-yard-long street populated by a few families who feel that traffic from Pleasant Street is dangerous for children in the neighborhood. Residents of James Lane and town official have been trying to close the small street for several years. But Edward Fitzpatrick of 68 Pleasant St. and his family have blocked the closure in court so they can use a small strip of land at the end of the street to pass from their property onto James Lane. Although Fitzpatrick does not own the 120-square-foot piece of land in question, he claims historic rights dating back 100 years to use the strip as an access to James Lane.

In 1995, the town blocked off James Lane with large rocks. But in 1996, a judge ordered the town to remove the rocks after Fitzpatrick took the town to court.

Town meeting voters took the piece of land by eminent domain for $1 last year to block off the street and make it a dead-end. Fitzpatrick hired attorney Charles Humphreys to fight the decision in Norfolk Superior Court. The eminent domain action is still pending because of the 1996 court injunction ordering the town not to block the land.

Plaza expansion plans unveiled

Large retail outlet slated for site

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A local developer set the stage for expansion of Cohasset Plaza this week.

Donald Staszko, president of Cohasset Development Trust, owner of the plaza that includes the Super Stop & Shop off Route 3A, plans to expand the supermarket by 1/3 with additional parking and to also construct a large retail store at the site.

To accommodate the expansion, the Atlantic Avenue resident needs town meeting to support a zoning change from residential to highway business for about two acres of land he owns that runs along the east side of the plaza from Sohier Street to the town owned-land behind Stop & Shop.

Staszko presented preliminary plans to selectmen Tuesday to get their input and support for the proposal that he also planned to take before the planning board last night after the Mariner went to press.

Staszko said Jane Bancroft Cook, the only direct abutter to the site besides the town, is supportive of the proposal.

Cook, who owns the property on the north side of Sohier Street, swapped a parcel of her land that abutted the back of the plaza with a section of Staszko's land eight years ago that facilitated future expansion of the shopping center.

The existing Stop & Shop is 48,000 square feet, the addition would add 40,000 square feet making the supermarket 64,000 square feet with the remainder reserved for a dry goods retail store. Staszko said he was in negotiations with several retailers but declined to name them.

"I'm talking to (potential) tenants, but it's no one I can say," he said.

The retail site that would house a single tenant would be adjacent to the Stop & Shop with the façade extending out to give it a separate identity.

The expanded supermarket would include a new area for perishables with more gondola space, a new deli-produce department and a new vaulted ceiling in that area.

A company spokesman at the meeting said the new store would be "the most current Stop

THINKING ABOUT VOTING NO?
GET THE FACTS!

MYTH:
A YES vote on question 1a, 1b & 1c will pay for items such as air conditioning and other extraordinary costs.

FACT
The override vote on Saturday has nothing to do with instituting new capital projects of paying for past infrastructure improvements. This vote is solely to maintain our quality town services and protect valuable educational programs that contribute to the success of our town and our school system.

MYTH:
If you vote YES, YES, YES you are approving all three overrides in total.

FACT
The override questions are not cumulative. If you vote YES on all three, only one question will be adopted by Town Meeting. We are asking people to vote YES, YES, YES on all three to protect the town from having to make devastating cuts if no override is approved.

MYTH:
A YES vote will support a school system that overpays its teachers.

FACT
With the ratification of their new contract, Cohasset teaching salaries will be brought up to the average of Norwell, Hingham, Hull, Scituate and Hanover.

MYTH:
The override vote only affects the schools.

FACT
Voting NO means many of our critical town services will be slashed or put into jeopardy including Police, Fire, Water, Elder Services, Library Staff, Town Maintainence, Teen Programs and Nursing Services.

and skate-boarders. A successful in-line skating facility has opened in Scituate, indicating that there is a demand for a place to enjoy the popular activity.

"I think a place like this would appeal to different age groups, especially with a roller blade rink," Worley said. "The rink could be frozen in the winter for ice skating and hockey. And a place like this could help get kids off the street. It could be a nice thing."

Worley said the idea for a skateboard park has been "kicking around" town for a few years. Currently, the recreation commission, the youth resources committee and the selectmen's office are exploring the idea, which is still in the early planning phases. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the idea is a good one, but funding is the main obstacle to the project.

Neil Murphy of Murphy and Wait, Engineers/Surveyors, helped out by drawing up plans for the facility at no charge to the town. Murphy's drawings include the rink, skateboard facilities and a track around the facility. Also included in the drawings are plans for another Little League field, which is a separate project. Worley said Murphy's drawings are an important step in the project.

"It will now be possible to seek private and public revenues to construct this facility," Worley said. "While this project may have to be accomplished in various stages, as moneys become available we are now in a position because of [Murphy's] work to seek funding."

Worley said the rink alone would cost about $28,000. Building the complete facility would cost $50,000-$60,000. If the town wanted to install night lighting, the cost would be even higher.

Scituate selectman's article seeks money to sue T

By Alice C. Coyle
STAFF WRITER

Three months after voting unanimously to oppose the MBTA's proposed Greenbush layover and station site along the Driftway, selectmen may now be gearing up for a legal fight with the transit authority.

Scituate Selectman Joseph Norton has reserved space on the March 1 town meeting warrant for an article proposing the town set aside money to engage in possible litigation with the T. Details on the specific wording of the article are sketchy, and Norton said he has no dollar figure in mind for the article at this point, but wants to find out if the town opposes the Driftway layover plan enough to fight it in court.

If voters should approve such an article and follow through with litigation, it would be the second Greenbush community to do so. In 1996, Hingham sued the MBTA for segmenting the Greenbush line from the rest of the Old Colony Rail project — which was being 80 percent federally funded — and planning to restore the 17.7-mile line with state money only. Hingham claimed in its suit that the segmentation of the Greenbush line was a means of evading tougher federal environmental review of the project which could force the agency to seek an alternative to restoring the commuter rail line at grade through Hingham's National Register Lincoln Historic District.

While Scituate has joined forces with its neighbors in Hingham and Cohasset demanding the state Secretary of Environmental Affairs seek a new environmental study of the project, Norton said his proposal for litigation would involve only Scituate and its particular concerns with the Driftway layover proposal.

"I said all along that the day will come when the town of Scituate is in court with the MBTA," Norton said. "There were so many issues that weren't going to be decided through negotiations. When something of this magnitude is happening to a town, you're going to have differences."

The board is expected to discuss Norton's article at next week's selectmen's meeting.

A staunch opponent of the estimated $285 million rail restoration project, Norton said the MBTA's layover site proposal is "by everyone's standards — those for and against the train — the worst possible choice."

In August, Old Colony Railroad Construction Manager Robert Egan informed the town that the MBTA's preferred layover alternative was W1 — a plan that places the rail station and its proposed 832-foot train platform on the north side of the Driftway near Raymond's Paint and Wallpaper and the layover/train storage facility on the south side of the busy thoroughfare. The proposal also calls for the construction of a 1,050 space parking lot along either side of Old Driftway and eminent domain land and property takings of more than 17 acres — 6.5 acres for the layover facility and 11 acres for the parking lot. Two residential parcels and six businesses including the Scituate Tennis Club, Stor-It Self Storage, Smith Auto Body and the Plymouth and Brockton bus terminal would have to be relocated to make room for the train.

Opposition to the plan has been great. In addition to the problem of trying to relocate businesses in a town with little commercial zoning space left, the Driftway site would involve eight daily crossings of the roadway raising myriad traffic concerns. But Egan said T planners don't anticipate traffic problems due to the crossings. In fact, Egan continues to tout the T's "roundabout" proposal for the dangerous Greenbush intersection (where Route 3A, Route 123, Country Way and the Driftway meet) as a way to improve traffic flow throughout the area. One of the first roundabouts in the state would use "diverter islands" to regulate and slow traffic entering the intersection from surrounding roads, Egan said.

"We've picked the alternative that is most sensitive to the environment and the neighborhood. We recognize there are environmental impacts and we plan to work to mitigate them. But this is our preferred alternative and the one we plan to advance in the final EIR (environmental impact report)."
OLD COLONY RAILROAD PROJECT MANAGER ROBERT EGAN

Even greater than traffic issues are environmental concerns associated with the layover proposal. Located just a stone's throw from the First Herring River which runs into the scenic North River, the proposed facility has brought local environmentalists opposed to the plan out in force. Last month Egan met with the North River Commission and dozens of concerned residents to air their pollution concerns. Egan said issues raised included the possible pollution consequences to the area if it became flooded in another 100-year storm. Discharge from the diesel locomotives running off into local waterways and marshlands was another concern. Egan explained that the T's mitigation plan includes the use of an oil/water separator — a drainage system that keeps pollutants out of local waterways and drip pans placed under the locomotives to trap pollutants should address the situation. While nothing is fail-safe, Egan assured environmentalists and residents that these mitigation measures are used successfully through out the T's commuter rail system.

Local officials are still questioning the MBTA's selection of the Driftway site. According to Scituate Selectman Susan Phippen, the T officials assured the North and South River Watershed Association nearly seven years ago that alternative W1 was off the table for environmental reasons. But after months of negotiations with the town to site the facility on the Scituate Landfill ended without an accord in July of 1997, Egan said transit planners returned to the Driftway proposal. A closer look at the landfill proposal showed it posed significant environmental challenges for the T, due to the Red Maple Swamp, Egan told town officials in August.

"We've picked the alternative that is most sensitive to the environment and the neighborhood," Egan said. "We recognize there are environmental impacts and we plan to work to mitigate them. But this is our preferred alternative and the one we plan to advance in the final EIR (environmental impact report)." Egan would not comment on the possible lawsuit other than to say that the MBTA has "no control over what the town's do."

"We're going to do this project and we're going to work closely not only with Scituate, but with all the communities along the line."

Having seen the slow progress of Hingham's lawsuit, filed in 1996 and slated for verbal arguments to begin this spring, Norton said he knows any litigation could be a long, drawn out process.

"It would be up to the town to decide if its worth it. I want to give the town an opportunity to say we don't want the layover site where it's proposed."

The month of December had many birthdays, here are a few people we would like to extend best wishes to (better late than never!): Mary Andracchio, Nancy Barrett, Lynn Eisenhauer, Tony Finegan, Steve Leighton, Roger Pompeo, Mary Londergen and Mitzi Railsback. Don't forget to give me a call if someone special in your life is going to have a birthday, we love to announce it so that all may give a celebration hug to the "star."

PERFECT VISIT

The "Hawaiians" had a perfect visit — they got to go sledding down the hill behind the high school, they got to go skating on the Common, they got to do every winter sport but skiing. A special thank you to those who loaned skates, warm clothes, everything! Things are sure quiet around this house, I can tell you that!

CHS TENTH REUNION

The day after Christmas the Class of 1988 held their 10th reunion at the Paul Lightkeepers House. It was a huge success, thanks to the efforts of Holly Pompeo and Abby (Adams) Greer! They have promised us a detailed report of the event, complete with pictures, so be watching for it in a future "Around Town."

GREETINGS TO OLD FRIENDS

Two names from the past called to wish all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year — Dr. Maloney, former Superintendent of Cohasset, and Randy Feola, son of the former Police Chief of Cohasset. Both are doing well, and both love living in a warm climate!

Ham is so versatile and tasty

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

It's my guess that all who are reading this served a ham over the holidays; ham is so versatile, so easy to prepare, and so tasty!

I'll also bet that some of that ham is in your freezer right now, there always seems to be too much to eat at one sitting! Here is a recipe for a whole dinner, one that can be cooked in the oven all together, in 75 minutes! The dinner will serve six.

HAM-STUFFED GREEN PEPPERS

6 green peppers
1-1/2 cups ground ham
4 slices crisp cooked bacon, chopped
2 cups boiled rice
2 tablespoons melted butter
2 tablespoons chopped onion
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1 cup diced tomatoes
1/2 cup water

Cut stem end from peppers. Remove seeds and white sections. Wash and drain. Mix ham, bacon, rice, butter, onion, pepper and tomatoes. Pile into peppers. Place in greased 9-inch pan; add 1/2 cup of water and bake.

HARVARD BEETS

12 medium-sized beets
3/4 cup water
2 tbsp. butter
2 tbsp. flour
1/3 cup vinegar
1/2 cup sugar
1/4 tsp. salt
1/3 cup water from beets

Wash beets. Pare and slice, and place in 1-qt. pan; add water. Cover tightly and bake. Before serving, drain off beet juice, saving 1/3 cup. Melt butter; add salt and flour. Stir until smooth. Add vinegar, sugar and beet juice. Cook until thick and clear. Add cooked beets and toss until coated.

SQUASH SOUFFLE

1/4 cup butter
2-1/2 tbsp. flour
1 cup milk
2 cups cooked mashed squash
2 tsp. onion juice
1 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. pepper
2 eggs, separated
3/4 cup cracker crumbs

Melt butter; add flour and stir until smooth. Add milk slowly and cook until thick and smooth, stirring constantly. Drain squash thoroughly before measuring, must be dry. Add onion, salt, pepper, egg yolks and cracker crumbs. Stir until well blended. Add white sauce and mix well. Beat egg whites stiff but not dry. Fold into squash. Pour into greased 1-1/2-quart casserole.

Baking directions: In cold oven place peppers and beets on lower shelf. On a shelf directly above, place squash. Set oven at 350 degrees, turn on, bake 75 minutes.

Thanks for speaking up

Before 1999 gets too far along, we still have some important 1998 business to attend to. Some of the following names may be familiar to you, others may not be. But the people attached to these names all have one thing in common: they wrote at least one letter to the Cohasset Mariner in 1998.

A few wrote thank you's to the people of Cohasset or organizations for their help or support; others complained about a decision or lobbied to have their views considered; while still others educated us about programs, problems or activities.

But no matter what the subject — putting pen to paper to share your views with your fellow citizens is important. The First Amendment is close to our hearts here in the newspaper business and at no time do we appreciate it more than when ordinary citizens, like those listed here, take advantage of their Freedom of Speech. And what better vehicle is there than your local paper?

Warm, wet weather made 1998 a record breaker

By Robert Skilling
CORRESPONDENT

Numerous new records (and near records) associated with unusually warm weather were recorded at the Blue Hill Observatory in Milton during 1998 — the warmest year in our 114-year record.

Probably the most amazing record set during the year was a high temperature of 89 degrees on March 31. This reading not only exceeded the old March high temperature record of 85 degrees set in 1945, but surpassed a reading of 86 degrees set just a few days earlier on March 28. The daily record high temperature for March 31 was broken by 20 degrees.

Another remarkably high temperature occurred in early December. On Dec. 7, a high temperature of 74 degrees broke the previous maximum for December which was 72 degrees set on Dec. 29, 1984.

Monthly mean temperatures averaged above the 30-year normal during each month with the exception of June. Seven months had departures of more than 2.5 degrees and four month were more than 3.5 degrees above normal.

January, February and December each had departures of more than 6 degrees. January was the ninth warmest January on record. February, with a mean temperature of 34.0 degrees (corrected to 24 hours) was second warmest on record after Feb.1984 which had a mean temperature of 34.9 degrees. With a mean temperature of 36.9 degrees December 1998 also made it into the record books as the second warmest winter following only Dec. 1891 which was slightly warmer with a mean temperature of 36.7 degrees

Overall, the year 1998 was a warm one. The mean temperature of 50.8 degrees made it the warmest on record. Previously 1953 held the distinction with a mean temperature of 50.3 degrees.

Last winter, was the warmest on record at the observatory with a mean temperature (corrected to 24 hours) of 32.6 degrees; the previous warmest winter was during 1936-1937, with a mean temperature of 32.3 degrees. Ponkapoag Pond, 1.5 miles southeast of the observatory, thawed on February 12, 1998, the third earliest date on record. The February snowfall total of just 1.0 inch equaled the second lowest February total on record.

About one dozen new warm weather temperature records were set during March including new daily, monthly and early seasonal records; several were also recorded for January and February. One daily high minimum temperature was equaled during August and a new record high temperature was set on Sept. 27. During December, about a half dozen warm temperature were established including the new December monthly and late seasonal maximum of 74 degrees on the 7th. A precipitation total of 71 inches made 1998 the wettest year on the record at the Observatory. The previous record of 69.36 inches was very recently set in 1996.

Each of the first six months of the year had well above normal precipitation but June broke all records. A total of 17.32 inches exceeded the previous June record of 13.73 inches in 1982 and became the second wettest of any month on record.

Bringing the outdoors in for nursing home residents

Garden therapy is popular at Cohasset Knoll

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Dried floral decorations for doors, potted plants for windowsills and assorted flower arrangements bring the outdoors indoors for nursing home residents at Cohasset Knoll, courtesy of monthly visits from the Cohasset Community Garden Club.

"There is a lot of socializing and camaraderie with the club ladies," said Mary Steele, activities director at Cohasset Knoll Skilled Nursing and Rehabilitation Facility off Route 3A. "They've been coming for so long and the residents wait patiently for each visit. We'd be lost without them."

There are about 30 nursing home "regulars" who show for the 2 p.m. visits that take place every second or third Wednesday of the month. The date is always set in advance and can be found in the garden club's yearbook that comes out each September.

"We've always done garden therapy for the retirement home," said Pamela Pelletier, president of the club. "I think they look forward to it."

"We come every month and I think they enjoy us because we bring the outside, and the outdoors inside for them," added garden club co-chair Marjorie Smith about the 10 club members who visit the nursing home residents with imaginative, theme-oriented programs.

For example, member Mary Eisenhaure's gingerbread cottages were the latest treat at Cohasset Knoll.

Smith thinks that the residents enjoy receiving visits from "new" friends who have become familiar.

"I think the residents at Cohasset Knoll are mostly pleased to have the company," she said. "It's as much social as anything else."

The 200-plus member garden club not only draws from Cohasset, but also has members from Norwell, Scituate and Hingham.

Pelletier joined the club five years ago while still new to her town of Norwell. A friend drew her in and within a year, she was serving on the board.

> "We come every month and I think they enjoy us because we bring the outside, and the outdoors inside for them."
> — Garden club co-chairwoman Marjorie Smith

Smith joined shortly after moving here four years ago when a welcoming neighbor and she discovered a common love of gardening.

"My neighbor was a member of the club," she explained. "She came over to welcome me to the neighborhood and we discovered that we had this common interest. Working on the club's various committees is also a great way to get to know people. I got involved with the garden therapy because the club's jobs committee asked me if I'd like to do that and I said, 'Sure.'"

The same holds true for Monique Mascart, who enrolled eight years ago when a friend invited her.

The club has two-year positions you can sign on for, and early on, Mascart served as chairwoman while she also participated in the garden therapy program.

Garden club member Pat Steele shows Winnie Mulligan a gingerbread house ready for decorating.

"I think it's wonderful for the residents to see new faces coming in with activities that they took so much time to prepare," she said. "It is definitely a lift for them socially and mentally. They just seem so happy when we go there."

Mascart now handles publicity for the club, which she enjoys because she let's people know what the garden club is all about.

"It is a very active club and we do a lot of good things for the town," she said. "It's been very rewarding."

Pelletier joined the board early on and after five years with the club, became its president.

"It's a great group of women and we all have a common cause," she said.

Steele, the Cohasset Knoll activities director, can vouch for the steadfastness of that cause.

"They've been coming here approximately 25 years," she said. "The group changes every two years or so and they take July and August off, but they're here the rest of the year with a different project each month that coincides with the holiday or season the visit falls near."

Mother's Day brought residents outdoors with club members to beautify their garden and the gingerbread houses for December were a hit.

"Gingerbread houses-what a great idea!" said Steele. "They fund this whole thing themselves and even bring snacks. The funny part of it is that it's not just the ladies that come. The men look forward to it, too. That's how good it is."

Helen Dorso, who will be 100 years young on Jan. 27, works on a gingerbread house through the garden therapy program conducted by the Cohasset Community Garden Club at Cohasset Knoll.

Conservation and environment high on garden club's agenda

The 40-plus year old Cohasset Community Garden Club is part of the Massachusetts Horticultural Federation, a state group. Club members hear from the state federation about current trends in gardening. Currently, its focus is environmental and conservation concerns.

"We're very careful with the chemicals and fertilizers we use and we're always interested in putting money toward purchasing land that can be used by the town," said Pelletier. "For example, we recently contributed to a purchase of a bit of Turkey Hill that was bought by the towns of Hingham and Cohasset. Also, we're now in the process of marking a trail behind the Cohasset Town Hall. People aren't aware of the native plants that are growing back there so we're marking the trail with the names of the plants and tress that are important. We also raise money for three $1,000 college scholarships for graduating Cohasset High students."

Conservation chairwoman Pat Stewart keeps club members informed of the latest conservation and environmental concerns that have been in the news.

Georgine Butman, who is in charge of the "Young Gardeners" program, also cultivates young gardeners' talents.

That group meets once a month to work on projects around their schools and also to compete with other junior gardeners at the annual flower show that comes to the Expo Center in Boston.

"We've won lots of first prizes and it gets the kids really excited at a young age," said Smith. "Like all our club members, our youngest gardeners are taught about conservation and the environment, too."

Cohasset Plaza expansion plans are unveiled

Staszko said the 11-year-old plaza is a plus for the town.

"This was the first major project in this community in 20 years," he recalled. "There were reservations on town boards and in the community at the time."

Staszko said the process then was a learning experience and because the plaza functions well, he expects it to be smoother this time around.

At the suggestion of Selectman Merle Brown, Staszko agreed to place an orange flag on Sohier Street at the point of the suggested zoning change so those on Fair Oaks Lane, which is up the hill off Sohier Street, could visualize where the expansion would end.

But he declined to hold off on his plans until the town develops a master plan as suggested by Selectman Tom Callahan.

Staszko explained that if the zoning change were approved, the project would have to go before the various boards in town, which takes time.

"You're talking another whole year (after town meeting) before you put a shovel to the ground," he said.

"The expansion will add $70,000 to $80,000 in taxes and it doesn't put another seat in the school system and doesn't add another police officer or firefighter. It's revenue to the bottom line and it doesn't tax services."

— Donald Staszko, plaza owner

Staszko pointed out commercial development can be good for the town. He said some people are having a tough time living in Cohasset because of the high tax rate.

"(The expansion) will add $70,000 to $80,000 in taxes and it doesn't put another seat in the school system and doesn't add another police officer or firefighter," he said. "It's revenue to the bottom line and it doesn't tax services."

Selectman Nan Roth had concerns that further development on Route 3A would hurt the village, which the town is trying to revitalize.

But Brown said larger retailers wouldn't draw from the village that consists of smaller shops.

Selectmen said they had no problem putting an article on the March 27 town meeting warrant asking for the zoning change.

In a previous interview, Humphreys said the town was trying to subvert the legal process by seizing the land. At the 1998 town meeting, Fitzpatrick argued that he was the victim of a neighborhood vendetta to deny him legal access to James Lane.

Scott Smith of 49 James Lane has led a neighborhood effort to make James Lane a dead-end. Smith said safety is the real issue, and the only reason residents want to make the street a dead-end. He said there are too many vehicles racing along James Lane to reach Pleasant Street.

"I don't want my kids to get killed on this lane," Smith said. "James Lane has never been a throughway."

Smith pointed out that James Lane residents have received strong support from town officials, other residents and town meeting voters. He said James Lane residents are grateful the strong support and good work by the law firm of Town Counsel Paul DeRensis.

Smith refuted previous claims by Fitzpatrick that he had historic usage rights to drive from his Pleasant Street home to James Lane. According to Smith, his research has shown that the house at 68 Pleasant St. was built between 1898 and 1901 when there wasn't even a James Lane in existence. Smith said the first house on James Lane wasn't built until around 1920.

"There's no historic access here," Smith said. "When the house [68 Pleasant St.] was built, people had horses. Why would anyone drag their horse through the woods when they had nice, new Pleasant Street to use. The owners of that house have never had an address on James Lane."

Community blood drive is Jan. 13

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, Jan. 13. the Red Cross Bloodmobile will be at the Unitarian Parish House at 23 North Main St. from 2 to 7 p.m. As in the past, babysitting will be provided from 3 to 6 p.m. The Red Cross depends on regular donations to meet the ongoing need for blood and blood by-products.

The Red Cross always counts on a good turnout when it visits Cohasset so please respond, if possible, when a volunteer from one of the church, civic, corporate or social organizations calls. New donors are welcome and especially needed. To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290.

Meetings to improve sewer project communication

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Better communication is hoped for, now that key players involved in the North Cohasset sewer project will begin meeting on an ongoing basis.

Sewer commissioner Ted Guild developed a plan for weekly meetings between sewer project contractors, Boston Gas representatives, engineers, safety officials and town police and fire officials to keep all workers apprised of the next week's schedule so that work sites can be properly marked and residents can be prepared to provide access to their homes, if necessary.

At the initial meeting Dec. 23, three contractors from D&C Construction of Rockland were present, as was John Albanese, owner of Albanese D&C of Malden.

D&C Construction is currently finishing up the initial part of the sewer project, called Phase 1, which entails laying all the mains in the streets and bringing stubs up to the 269 property lines on the homes slated for hookup to Hull's sewer plant.

The company is still under investigation by the state's Department of Public Safety for an unusual number of gas leaks; some of which were not properly reported.

"We think we have a bit of a problem here," said Tim Shevlin, public relations spokesman for the state Department of Telecommunications and Energy Pipeline and Engineering Division last week. Shevlin is also investigating D&C Construction's work in Cohasset. A representative from his division sat in on the meeting, as did an employee of the state Department of Public Safety.

Last month, the state Department of Public Safety confirmed that nearly 14 gas leaks occurred while D&C Construction worked on the North Cohasset sewer project, but only eight or nine were reported. That, and numerous other allegations, led the department to yank the hoisting license of Guiseppe "Joe" Digiacomo, acting manager of D&C Construction Company of Rockland.

"I think the sewer commission should be commended for taking the steps they've taken in this matter."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Richard Feeney, district engineering inspector for the Department of Public Safety, investigated the situation with the aid of Captain Mark Trask of the Cohasset Fire Department, town engineer Arthur Leventis and Cohasset Special Officer James McLean.

Complaints from residents prompted the investigation.

Digiacomo said that he has been doing such work for 11 years and had never had a dig as bad as this one. He cited poor marking on the gas lines as the cause of the leaks.

There have been other safety issues involved, however.

On Sept. 10, a "large piece of ledge flew and landed within feet" of the resident and her three-year-old daughter in the backyard of a Forest Notch home. The 6 in. x 5 in. x 3 in. rock ledge "fell with a forceful impact" that imbedded about 1.5 inches in the lawn, according to the visiting family member who penned a complaint to the office of the State Fire Marshall.

When the visitor went to the contractor's engineer in the presence of the policeman on duty to show the piece of rock, he saw that they had not used a steel mat over the blast area of roadway as a preventive measure. He also noted that the policemen present had not been given a hard hat to wear for protection.

"There is no law against contractors being ignorant to the neighbors, but I license people to be trustworthy and competent," said Feeney of the Dept. of Public Safety.

At the time of the incident, Dan Coughlin, spokesman for Tutela Engineering which has been hired by the town to oversee the sewer project, had not received a full report about Digiacomo's license revocation and had not heard that neighbors' were concerned about D&C Construction Company's work.

Coughlin maintains that a police officer is always on hand to maintain safety.

"They are the public safety officials for the town of Cohasset," he said. "It's only been this last time that there has been a great concern raised and I think that was raised because of the Hingham situation."

Just before Thanksgiving, Richard and Anne Crowley narrowly escaped with their lives when their 52 Canterbury Street home in Hingham exploded due to a gas main break leading to their home.

The contractor involved in that incident, Albanese D&S of Rockland, was recently awarded a $3.8 million contract to complete Phase 1A of the sewer project, which entails hooking up the homes to the sewer main stubs installed by D&C Construction.

Albanese, too, has cited poor markings as the reason for the incident in Hingham.

Guild expects that the meeting will prevent future difficulties for the project.

"The meeting went very well," Guild said. "I called the meeting to establish better communication all around between everyone involved."

Police Chief Brian Noonan attended the meeting and offered his assistance to help gas company workers gain access to homes.

"We offered to notify people that the gas company would be working on their homes," said Noonan. "We have details down there daily so it's an issue that we're already on top of."

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln was also at the meeting, but was called away early in the two-hour session.

"I think the sewer commission should be commended for taking the steps they've taken in this matter," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "Basically, they're trying to make sure that when Albanese, who has been awarded this project, comes in, they will have already set up guidelines to make sure everyone knows what everyone else is doing."

Last call for youth lacrosse players

The Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program for children in grades five and six is completing its spring registration by mail.

At a sign-up session Dec. 12, 24 players registered for the program, slightly fewer than expected. Coach Chuck Jaffe said that he anticipated 34 sign-ups, based on returning players and those who played in the recreation department's summer camp; he noted that 36 players are necessary for Cohasset to field two teams in the spring of 1999.

Cohasset must notify the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League by Jan. 19 if it intends to field two teams in the Under-12 level. That date should also be considered the deadline for signing up, because registration thereafter will be on a space-available basis — potentially with few spaces open.

"If we stick with one team, we will play the first 28 kids to sign up, because it is impractical to carry more players than that on one team," says Jaffe. "Fielding two teams not only lets us accommodate more players — as many as 42 — it lets the kids get more repetitions during practices and more playing times in the games."

The Cohasset Junior Lacrosse program accepts both boys and girls, but plays by men's lacrosse rules only. Practice begins in March; practices are Monday and Friday afternoons, with games played on Sundays through the middle of June.

Registration is $75. For registration forms, call Jaffe at 383-9858.

The Cohasset seventh- and eighth-grade lacrosse program also is registering players for 1999. At that level, Cohasset will field just one team. The program is open to boys in the seventh- and eighth grades, including those who play lacrosse in private school programs.

For more details and registration forms, parents of middle-school children should call Terry Kahn at 383-0332.

The CHS came up with one of their biggest team wins ever when they overtook 21 Divison 1 and Division 2 wrestling squads to win the Marshfield Holiday Wrestling Tournment. In the front row are Mike Baird, Daniel Littauer, Liam O'Donnell Luke Caldwell, Mike Rossi and Justin Golden. Standing are Torin Sweeney (coach), Justin Langham, Tim Baird, Dan Duffy, Ben Littauer, Tim Grassey, J.P. Laugelle, Chris Pratt, Kevin DeVito and coach Deke Conklin. Skippers land a big one

Grapplers come home with tourney win

They walked into the land of the giants as the smallest of the combatants and walked out with the top prize.

The CHS wrestling team went into the annual Marshfield Holiday Wrestling Tourney confident they could hold their own against the more than 20 Division 1 and 2 wrestling powers such as Bridgewater-Raynham, Somersett, North Attleboro, Plymouth South, Weymouth and even their South Shore League rival Carver Crusaders that annually compete in the event.

In what was a true team effort, the Skippers got points from almost all of their grapplers on their way to amassing 170.5 points, good enough for a 1.5 margin of victory over Hingham and 10 point over the third place Weymouth squad.

The host team, Marshfield, would come in fourth and they were fol-

Gold medal hockey women to appear at book signing

Tricia Dunn and Katie King, members of the Gold Medal-winning U.S. Women' s Olympic hockey team, will sign copies of their new book, "Gold Medal Ice Hockey for Women and Girls," Saturday, Jan. 9, from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Route 3A, Cohasset.

"Gold Medal Ice Hockey for Women and Girls" is a book for novices and hard-core hockey players, as well as coaches, parents and fans. Packed with pictures, the book explains the basics of the game and recounts the struggles and successes of both Dunn and King on their path to Olympic Gold. Dunn is a graduate of UNH where she helped capture an ECAC title and stands 13th in all-time scoring. The Hockey News named her best skater on Team USA, where she was known for being a defensive specialist and constant on the penalty kill. King graduated from Brown where she was named hockey's Ivy League Player of the Year for three consecutive years, as well as ECAC Player of the Year in 1997 . She became the all-time leading scorer in Brown history during her senior year, and was tied with three others for leading scorer on the Olympic team. Both have set their sights on Team USA in 2002.

This is King's and Dunn's first appearance on their book tour and the only local opportunity to meet these women. Call (781) 383-2665 for more information.

lowed by Plymouth South, North Attleboro, Silver Lake, Bridgewater-Raynham, Carver and Somersett to round out the top 10.

"This is really an incredible accomplishment for a team a school as small as ours is," said head coach Torin Sweeney. "We needed to have a little bit from everyone to be able to win this and that is what we got."

Sweeney added that the tourney was "the biggest one that we have ever won" and was tougher than the sectional tournament that the squad competes in at the end of the season.

"Look at all the Division 1 and Division 2 teams that were at this tourney," said the coach. "It really is an unbelievable accomplishment."

The 4-0 Skippers are right back in action this week as they hosted Scituate last night (Wednesday) and travel to Whitman-Hanson on Saturday morning for another match-up with a tourney of impressive Division 1 teams.

Leading through the first round of the Marshfield holiday tourney, Sweeney said he knew his team could compete with the other teams but an injury to a top wrestler in senior captain Mike Baird left him doubtful that his squad could take home the top prize.

Baird has been out injured all season long but is expected to be back for a big meet at Whitman-Hanson tournament.

"Without Mike there for us, I didn't think we would have the points to win. But we kept hanging around the top spot into the final round and got some important pins along the way that put us over the top," said Sweeney.

In the finals, Liam O'Donnell would be the only Skipper to win his weight class as he took the 140 pound division to remain undefeated on the year.

He was joined in the finals by three other wrestlers.

Mike Rossi took second in the 152 pound class.

Luke Caldwell also took a second place at 171 pounds.

A number of other Cohasset wrestlers won important points for the team but didn't make it to the finals.

Senior Ben Littauer took third at 145 pounds.

J.P. Laugelle took third in the heavyweight division.

Freshman Dan Littauer was fourth in the 130 pound class and junior Chris Pratt was fifth in the 119 pound class.

In addition, Joe Carbone won two matches wrestling at 218 pounds and 189 pound wrestler Kevin DeVito won four points for the team when he knocked off the fifth seed in his weight class.

"What we had was a true team effort," said Sweeney. "Everyone contributed something to the overall cause."

TOP TEN REASONS NOT TO TRY CHIROPRACTIC

#10 "I like my left shoulder higher than my right." You're not alone...take a look around you. It doesn't take a rocket scientist to notice how out of balance many people are. I know a good tailor that can cover it up.

#9 "The tingling & numbness in my fingers is actually starting to feel good." Good...get used to it. It will only get worse. Maybe if you're lucky, you'll have surgery someday.

#8 "These headaches I have are normal. They say so on that aspirin ad on TV." Headaches are NOT normal, regardless of what drug companies want you to believe.

#7 "Telling girls that I got this limp in the war makes me an instant hit at parties." Low back pain and neck pain may get you sympathy, but it is certainly no party.

#6 "A friend of a guy at work said his aunt's sister-in-law's older brother was hurt by a chiropractor." Who are these obscure people anyway? Chiropractic is beyond a doubt the safest of all the healing professions. It is documented and has the health care industry's lowest malpractice insurance problems to prove it.

#5 "My neck feels fine. So what if I can't turn my head to the left...I'll get better." It may start feeling better but probably at the expense of something else. Chiropractic can restore normal function.

#4 "Surgery makes more sense to me. I've already had my gall bladder cut out, and I'm sure the doctors wouldn't remove anything I really need." I'd rather attempt to restore health to sick tissue than surgically remove it, but of course I'm one of those crazy people who changes the oil in his car BEFORE the engine blows up.

#3 "Back spasms are a great excuse for why I missed that 3 foot putt." Muscle spasms are merely a symptom of a much larger underlying problem. A thorough examination is necessary to uncover the cause of the problem, then correct it.

#2 "If I stopped using all these drugs my prescription card would go to waste." Over medication is a growing problem in our country today. All drugs have side effects. Only you can decide if the risks are worth the benefits.

#1 "This ringing in my ears drowns out my mother's Guy Lombardo records." Many people have found relief from headaches, leg pains, and a variety of other health problems the safe, natural way with Chiropractic. NATURE has already "cured" Guy Lombardo.

If your health problems have stopped being funny, maybe you SHOULD try the Chiropractic approach.

Cruising into Cabaret season

Show dates are Jan. 28, 29 & 30

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

South Shore residents can join this year's "Cabaret" cast in "Cruising Out of the '90s." There's sure to be something for everyone in a show whose cast members range in age from 18 to mid-'80s. Longtime performer Jim Sherwin turns 86 this year.

The annual event is a key fund raiser for Hingham Community Center. The 37th "Cabaret," the last show of this millennium, kicked off rehearsals this week. Show dates are Jan. 28, 29 and 30. Interested performers gathered Sunday at the community center for the traditional "Meet the Directors" party. The enthusiastic crowd cheered this year's director, Milburn Amy of Cargill Productions in New York, who also directed 1995's show, "Sailing Thru the Nineties."

Liz Tronni leads the Fancy Five in a rendition of "Fame" at Cabaret auditions at the Hingham Community Center on Sunday.

When asked by Cargill if he would like to direct another show in Hingham, Amy was enthusiastic about the opportunity.

"It's an all-new show, and it's going to be fantastic," he said.

General Chairman Faye O'Brien was pleased to see such a good turnout "despite the bad weather and the Patriots game (on television)." She served in the same capacity 10 years ago, sharing duties with Nancy Reilly.

"The director has a great, exciting show for us," O'Brien said.

Sporting socks decorated with the words, "Hingham Cabaret '95," Amy said Hingham is "near and dear" to his heart.

Those attending the party introduced themselves to their neighbors so newcomers and "old-timers" alike would feel comfortable.

Alex Doucette, who has performed in Cabaret for some 17 years, just can't stay away. Many individuals return year after year to perform in the show.

"We know the director has a variety of experience, and we've enjoyed him in the past," he said. "The reason everyone keeps coming back is for the family of 'Cabaret,' whether it's your first or 17th show. You always leave with new friends."

Following Amy's description of this year's production, open auditions for specialty numbers were held.

Spectators at the 1999 show will take a "sail" to romantic and exotic parts of the world, including the Eiffel Tower, Germany, the Austrian Alps, Argentina and the South Pacific. The final destination is the Statue of Liberty.

Featured numbers include "Ship of Dreams" from "Titanic"; a Cole Porter song; "There's Nothing Like a Dame"; "New York, New York"; and a rousing finale to the tune of "Lullaby of Broadway."

Since he was last in Hingham, Amy has had all his music put onto a laptop computer. The computer program can raise or lower the key as needed.

Juliet Cunningham, musical director since 1986, is again on board. Chris Bullock is talent chairperson, and day talent chair is Marcia Way.

O'Brien commended show chairman Greg Hall for his many years of service to "Cabaret" in that capacity.

"We have lots of (music) books, so if you don't have a song, go find one!" Cunningham told the audience prior to open auditions.

Daytime rehearsals this year will be held in the auditorium of the new town hall on Central Street. Performers will practice evenings at the community center.

The most important thing is for everyone to have a lot of fun, Amy said.

Bullock encouraged those in attendance to sign up for some numbers.

"No splits or cartwheels will be necessary to audition," Bullock said. "It's not one of those years."

But, he recommended, with a short rehearsal schedule, performers should also dedicate some home time to practicing their numbers.

"I've been known to do a time step in a restaurant kitchen," Bullock quipped. "You can practice in your head or even on the commuter boat!"

Nevertheless, some numbers will require more dexterity than others.

Performers in a "Love Boat" kick line, for example, need to have lots of "stamina," Amy said.

Other numbers include a soft-shoe "Foggy Day in London Town"; "Happy Wanderer" drill; "Forty-Second Street" and "Hat and Cane Song" tap dancing; "Don't Tell Mama" burlesque; tambourines; dancing couples; women's comedy; chorus numbers; and a variety of solos. Sure to be a hit is a male drag number, "Spice Up Your Life." That one is for "Spice Girl wannabes," said Amy with a laugh.

The director has come up with a "Broadway Bound" newsletter to keep cast members informed about all the details involved in this year's "Cabaret."

"We're happy to welcome Milburn back to Hingham after four years," said O'Brien. "He has some super ideas."

Other "Cabaret" committee members include: Lorri Costello, costumes; Greg O'Meara, tickets; Beth Bell, program book; George O'Brien, Janet Hochstrasser and Rosie Heron, raffle; Jeanne Murphy, patrons; Greg Hall, publicity; John O'Blenes, Armory; Mynetta and Marie Terman, stage managers; Bob Lowe, bar services; Larry Terman, ushers; Donna MacIssaac, make-up; Jonathan O'Neil, set construction; and Greg Hall and Don Thompson, cast party.

Beat the winter blues!

"Cabaret" lovers are invited to become patrons of this year's show, which benefits Hingham Community Center and citizens of all ages who participate in the many activities offered there.

For $15, an individual can be come a "patron"; an individual membership and "patron" status is offered for $25; and family membership and "patron" status is available for a $35 donation.

The names of patrons will appear in the program book, and they will have an opportunity to purchase tickets and tables in advance of the general public.

Tickets are $12 for the Thursday, Jan. 28, show; $15 for Friday, Jan. 29; and $20 for the Saturday, Jan. 30, show.

Patron tickets will be available Thursday and Friday, Jan. 14 and 15, from 7 a.m.-noon and from 7-9 p.m. Two tables may be purchased as long as there is a paid patron for each table.

Town budget talks begin in earnest

$690K deficit projected

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen rolled up their sleeves this week and began to take a hard look at the town's hefty budget deficit anticipated for fiscal year 2000, which begins July 1.

As it stands now, voters will be asked to make up the expected $690,000 shortfall by passing a Prop. 2-1/2 override at the April 10 town election.

If passed, the override will cost the owner of the average Cohasset house valued at $341,000 about $385.47 more a year for a total tax bill of $5,484.27, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

A Prop. 2-1/2 override is needed because all of the proposed Fiscal Year 2000 budget increase cannot be absorbed within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2, the state law which caps the amount a town's tax levy can go up in any given year without a positive vote at the polls.

Haddad described the budget as a "maintenance budget" because it would maintain services at the current level.

The proposed override is about $30,000 more than previously reported because it includes establishing a building maintenance division in the DPW that would be in charge of maintaining all town buildings, eventually including the schools. Currently, while the town has janitorial service, there is no one charged with maintaining the buildings. The money would pay for 1-1/2 more positions to be added to the existing 1-1/2 janitorial positions so there is sufficient manpower for maintenance as well as cleaning, Haddad said.

Selectman Tom Callahan said while he agrees the town cannot live within the constraints of Prop. 2-1/2, "even a town like ours will reach the breaking point." He said the town needed more fiscal discipline.

"I'd like to see the budget grow at 4 percent a year and limit us to that," he said. The proposed budget is nearly 6 percent over FY99.

"Even a town like ours will reach the breaking point."
— Selectman Tom Callahan

Callahan said increases in permitting fees need to be studied and he suggested selectmen immediately institute the "buck-a-bag" program at the RTF to increase recycling and therefore reduce the tipping fees the town must pay.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said the town has been fiscally prudent.

She said townspeople do not expect "cuts and pain" and that the town has tried hard to exercise discipline and keep the budgets low.

"People that talk to me don't share that view," Callahan said.

Selectman Nan Roth, a former chairman of the advisory committee, sided with McMorris.

"I've been over budgets line by line for nine years and there's very little fat if any in the budget," she said. "The issue is services vs. cost and contracts. If you cut services, you end up cutting personnel."

Roth said the options to cut costs are to negotiate contracts to include lower salary increases and to regionalize some town and school services with other towns.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said department heads were getting 8-to-10 percent increases and that "was sending the wrong message." She said they should be capped at no more than 5 percent.

McMorris and Roth disagreed. They said that higher salaries were necessary to keep good managers.

"That's being penny-wise and pound foolish," McMorris said. "We'll be saying goodbye to good people."

Selectmen and Haddad will continue budget discussions at the selectmen's meeting at 7:30 p.m., Jan. 12.

Figures discussed Tuesday allow a 6 percent increase in the school budget. That's just an estimate based on the average increase over the past several years, because selectmen have not yet seen the school budget proposal.

Beechwood's new pastor feels right at home

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Ask Beechwood Congregational Church's search committee chairman Linda Snowdale what made her board choose new pastor Dr. Branson Roberts to lead its congregation and she'll tell you, "Everything."

Roberts, a full-time professor in the Department of Religion at Eastern Nazarene College in Quincy, recently began a five-year commitment to fill a the part-time position at the 140-year-old church.

"Our church has been around for a long, long time," deacon Edward Hettstrom explained. "It's always been a small community church and the unfortunate thing is that we've always only needed a part-time pastor. We've been fortunate in the past to find people and now we've had the double fortune to come upon Branson Roberts."

The five-member search committee had been looking for a new part-time pastor since the summer of 1997 when the church's intern pastor, just out of seminary, sought a part-time position elsewhere.

Letters were sent out to local colleges and seminaries and Roberts' letter of response, with an offer to fill the pulpit, pretty much decided the committee.

"We interviewed him a couple of times and one of the questions we asked him was, why should we not hire you?" Snowdale said. "He said that he takes his faith very seriously and if we weren't interested in taking our faith seriously, we shouldn't hire him."

Roberts, who is the son of a minister, began his work in 1965 when he felt it was his calling in life to be a pastor. "I was kind of seeing that that's who I am," he said.

Fresh out of seminary, Roberts began his work with a Pennsylvania congregation similar in size to Beechwood's.. Perhaps his greatest challenge at the time was breathing real life into sermons derived from the texts he'd been living in through his studies.

"He has a very warm, loving personality and was able to reach out to everyone, from the kids to the elderly members of the church."

— Linda Snowdale

His last assignment was as pastor to a congregation of 500 in Grand Rapids, Michigan.

"That was a full-time job and this is my first part-time position, but I feel just as involved here since I've visited parishioners in the hospital and performed weddings and funerals," Roberts said.

May Merritt, 90, of Scituate, is a new-found and fervent fan of her new pastor. Merritt and a few other older church members have already been to Roberts' Rockland home for lunch..

"I've been with the church 57 years, ever since I was married," she said. "It's small enough to be a family church and I just love it. I am very proud of the church, of Branson and all the people. Branson is always there when you need him."

Snowdale was impressed by Roberts' desire early on to visit with homebound parishioners and his idea to have meetings in members' homes so that he could get to know them better.

"He has a very warm, loving personality and was able to reach out to everyone, from the kids to the elderly members of the church," she said. "He just fit in. He has a lovely wife, Joan, who came to church with him, wanted to participate in choir and everybody just kind of fell in love with him. It was a match made in heaven."

Roberts notes that his parishioners are an involved group with interests that range from a town election supper with the candidates to collecting foodstuffs and clothing for the homeless.

"What is most rewarding here is the close and friendly atmosphere," he said. "The congregation knows, supports and encourages each other. They are there for each other, which was the first, most obvious thing to me when I came here."

When he is not bringing the Bible to life in the classroom or from the pulpit, Roberts is busy with his infant and toddler.

"People see pastors as different," he said. "There is a certain respect for the position that people have. The way a person functions in that role can increase or decrease that position, depending in part on others' expectations. I tell my students that pastoring can be a means of grace because we're forced to learn humility. We gradually realize that we can't have all the answers."

While Roberts is happy to be fulfilling his life's calling, he would not describe it as an effortless vocation. "Some say, 'Find something you like and you never work,' but the emotional burden you can carry for people as their pastor can be very fulfilling and draining."

For now, Roberts is happy to continue learning about his parishioners, their church, its traditions and the Beechwood and Scituate communities it serves.

"We hope that we have him for a long time," Snowdale said.

Budget deficit could take off

Schools to seek 10 percent hike

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

If the school department has its way, then the town's proposed Fiscal Year 2000 budget will get bigger.

And along with that, the projected Prop. 2-1/2 override to fund an anticipated deficit will also go up, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Selectman Merle Brown, who attended last week's school committee meeting, reported the schools are seeking a minimum increase of about 10 percent.

Haddad's budget projections allowed for a 6 percent increase in the school budget to $8.7 million based on the school department's average increases over the past three years.

A 10 percent increase in the school budget will increase the override needed to balance the books from nearly $700,000 to $1.03 million, Haddad said.

That would add 30 cents more per $1,000 of assessed valuation to the projected tax rate of

Land taking paves way for new tank

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Members of the water commission have approved a plan to take about two acres of land on Scituate Hill by eminent domain to build a 70-foot water tank. The land is owned by developer J. Michael Susi and Sons. Water commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said the taking proceedings would begin as soon as Tutela Engineering, the water commission's consultant, prepared drawings and plans to file in land court. Tutela owner Dominic Tutela estimated his engineers could have the drawings ready in about three weeks.

The decision to seize the land caps off a two-year delay of attempts to build a new water tank. In 1996, town meeting approved the

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

The next time you attend a hockey game at any level, take a second to look inside the masks.

You may be very surprised at what you see.

A pony tail and a scrunchy hanging down past a player's shoulders?

The future Homecoming Queen?

Somebody's mother?

It's all part of the changing face in hockey rinks around the nation as more and more females of all ages are lacing up their skates, strapping on the shin pads and jumping over the boards to take their shift on the ice.

Helping to spearhead this movement were members of the United States Women's Ice Hockey team that captured the gold medal at the Nagano Olympic Games last winter. Two members of that squad, New Hampshire natives Tricia Dunn and Katie King, were at Buttonwood Books and Toys in Cohasset over the weekend on the first stop in a promotional tour for their new book "Gold Medal Ice Hockey for Women and Girls."

Recent numbers indicate there is an audience out there waiting to purchase the book.

Since USA Hockey (the governing body of the men's and women's Olympic teams) began tracking female membership in 1990, the group has grown 430 percent in that time and their was a 718 percent increase in the number of girls and women's teams in those eight years.

"It's not so much of a shock now when you see a girl out there skating with the team. It's more of the norm now than when we were growing up. Now it's like, 'She's got long hair, she's got a ponytail. Big deal.' I think the novelty is gone."
U.S. OLYMPIC HOCKEY STAR TRICIA DUNN

As well, participation in hockey programs has jumped 556 percent in girls 15-and-younger since 1990 and a good portion of that has been in your own backyard as Massachusetts ranks behind only Minnesota in participation.

On the local level, women's teams have sprung up at almost of the local ice arenas on the South Shore and on the Cape. One of them, from the Commonwealth Hockey League, recently had an exhibition game at the FleetCenter before a Bruins contest.

The game is gaining moment at the youth level and women high school hockey players competed for the first time ever this past summer at the Bay State Games.

Seeing a woman on a hockey team is no longer the novelty it once was and the Olympians couldn't be happier.

"It's not so much of a shock now when you see a girl out there skating with the team. It more of the norm now than when we were growing up," said Dunn, who coached a girls varsity team at Milton Academy last year and hopes to go behind the bench once again in the future. "Now it's like, 'she's got long hair, she's got a ponytail. Big deal.' I think the novelty is gone."

But that doesn't mean Dunn is not out there supporting her sisters of the hockey sticks.

"If we get to the rink early before a game and the youth and pee-wees are playing we'll always check it out to see if there are any girls playing and give them a little support to make sure their keeping up with the boys and holding her own," said Dunn.

Through the book, King said she hopes "to tell women and girls that it's never too late to get involved" in the sport of hockey.

"I'd love to have a little girl come up to me and tell me that they started skating because

New subcommittee to meet

Selectman Tom Callahan said he was relieved to hear a subcommittee of the school committee to look into alternative financing for the schools will meet Jan. 27. He pointed out that school committee member Pat Martin raised the issue in her campaign last year.

"I'm glad to see that effort getting off the ground," he said.

Old photographs sought

Selectman Diane Sullivan asked residents who have interesting town photographs taken from 1950 to the present to lend them to the town history committee. The town history committee is charged with compiling the third volume of the Cohasset's history. Photos can be left at the selectmen's office at town hall, she said.

Train unity is urged

Michael Dick, who sits on the Greenbush Mitigation Committee and Conservation Commission, urged selectmen this week to stand "shoulder to shoulder with Hingham and Scituate" on train mitigation issues.

He was concerned that two selectmen, Diane Sullivan and Ronnie McMorris, refused to sign a letter last fall to then state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe asking for a new environmental impact report because the letter talked about alternatives. Sullivan and McMorris said the work with their counterparts in Hingham and Scituate should be limited to the mutual issues of noise, vibration and pollution.

But Dick, who was speaking as an individual and not for the boards he sits on, said the towns would have more clout working as a unit even if they don't agree on all points.

"None of the three towns' mitigation issues have been properly met," he said.

Selectmen said they are interested in sitting down with selectmen in Hingham and Scituate once a mutually agreeable date is set.

Growth committee appointments

Selectmen appointed Neil Glick of Spring Street, Lisa Bumstead of Nichols Road and Nancy Herlin of Nichols Road to the Growth and Development Committee. Rick Swanborg of Nichols Road was appointed as an alternate. In a 3-2 vote, selectmen agreed to appoint the citizens who applied first to the committee. There were four more applicants in the past week: Frank King of Linden Drive, Jim Shipsky of Doane Street, Helen Pratt of Ripley Road and Margy Charles of Linden Drive.

Selectman Diane Sullivan thought Town Manager Mark Haddad should talk to all the applicants and come back with a recommendation.

"I think they should all be interviewed," she said.

Last week selectmen extended the deadline to allow more people to apply.

"I don't think we should ask others to apply and then go back and pick the first three," Sullivan said.

Selectman Merle Brown said he preferred selecting those who had lived in town the longest because of the unique perspective they could provide.

Eliminating Civil Service

Selectman Merle Brown said he'd like to see Cohasset withdraw from the state Civil Service system altogether. The town uses Civil Service when hiring police officers and fire fighters.

"I'd like to see us hire them through the regular routine of advertising," Brown said.

He pointed out that last time it took three months to get the Civil Service list and while the town was waiting, overtime had to be expended to cover the vacancy. Under Civil Service, the state tests prospective candidates and provides the town with a list of names.

Selectman Nan Roth asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to get the fire and police chiefs' opinions on the proposal.

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis said he would look into what legal avenues would be needed should the town decide not to participate in Civil Service.

Selectmen's plaza action premature, planners say

Article approval vote irks board

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Planning board members aren't happy that selectmen strayed onto their turf last week when they voted to put a rezoning issue before voters for March town meeting.

Cohasset Plaza owner Donald Staszko's plans to expand the 11-year-old Super Stop & Shop off Route 3A went before selectmen prior to the planning board that traditionally covers such matters.

The Atlantic Avenue resident outlined his expansion plans to allow more parking space and the addition of a large retail store on the site which requires town meeting approval to convert the two acres at the east side of the plaza, stretching from Sohier Street to the town-owned land behind Stop & Shop, from residential to highway business zoning. Staszko earned a place on the town meeting warrant through selectmen's unanimous vote.

It is expected that the town would derive as much as $70,000 to $80,000 in annual taxes from the filled-out plaza.

Stop & Shop now covers 48,000 square feet. The addition would add 40,000 square feet, making the supermarket 64,000 square feet while also reserving space for a dry goods retail store. Staszko told selectmen that he is in negotiations with several as yet unnamed retailers.

The additional retail site would be adjacent to the Stop & Shop with its own facade to identify it as a separate business entity.

The enlarged supermarket would house a new area for perishables with more gondola space, a new deli-produce department and a new vaulted ceiling in that section.

Planning board member Robert Sturdy confronted Staszko's attorney, Charles Humphreys, after he presented plans for the site to his board Jan. 6. Staszko and Humphreys met with selectmen Jan. 5.

"You could well have come to us first," Sturdy said.

"I don't apologize," Humphreys answered. "Are you offended that I went to selectmen first?"

Sturdy said that Humphreys did not need anything from the planning board to go forward on plans for the plaza because selectmen had already set the wheels in motion.

But Humphreys was not the only one to draw the board's reproach; Chairman Al Moore was most upset with selectmen.

"We're all busy people here, but I think it would have been decent if (selectmen) had chatted with us first about our feelings and where we would be on all this," he said. "I don't think their actions did us any great favor.

"Merle, we are put off that you took a vote on this," Moore told selectman Merle Brown, who was present at the planning board meeting. "You might have wanted to get our input."

"It's a planning board item," committee member John O'Toole added. "Why are you usurping this?

Still, planning board members approved selectmen's putting the zoning article on the town meeting warrant.

Brown concedes that the selectmen's move in favor of Staszko will make it harder for the planning board to nay-say the expansion.

"Once it's changed to business zoning, it is a changed issue," Brown said. "What they're doing is they want to make the business zone larger and if they get that through the town meeting, then they would have to go to planning, but it will be harder for the planning board to say no to them then."

Master plan

Moore was also upset because selectmen are working on a master plan for the town when there is little room left for building.

"If there was a 2,000 acre of land we knew was going to break up with a southern-California style home development, we'd be jumping up and down to get a plan," Moore said. "But growth is sporadic with building and there is more knocking down and rebuilding anyway. Nearly half of Cohasset is park land."

Reached for comment this week, Brown explained that he had asked Moore for several years to be involved in drawing up a town plan.

"There is a lot going on in this town, even though there isn't a lot of building," he said. "I tried to get (the planning board) to do it; they didn't want to and now the selectmen feel that it's important we go with it."

Parking, traffic light issues raised

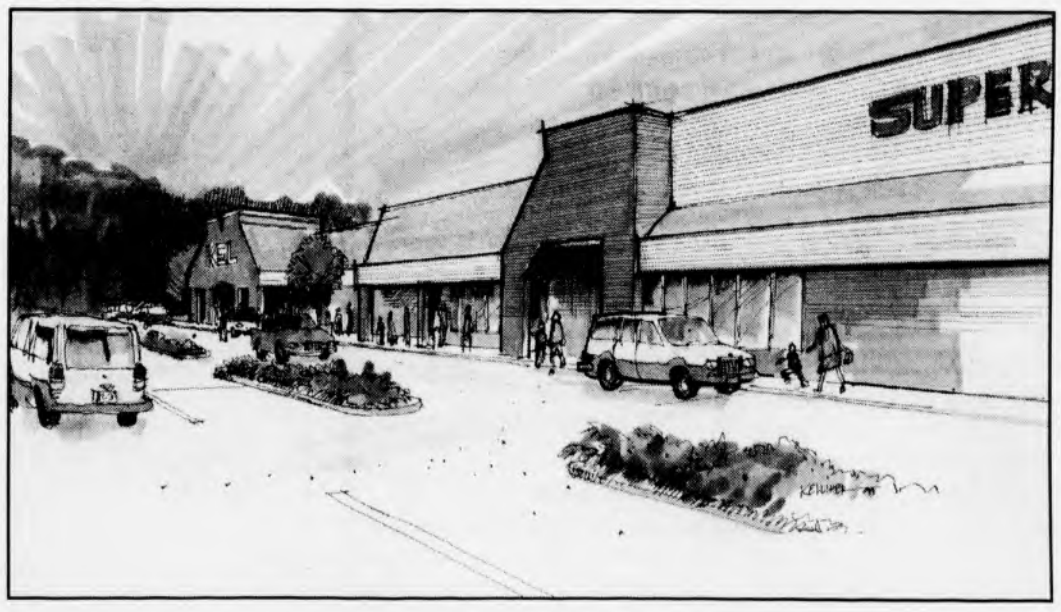
Planning board member Robert Sturdy warned Donald Staszko's attorney, Charles Humphreys, not to seek a variance from the required number of parking spaces allowed in the plans for an expanded Stop & Shop plaza. Humphreys recently pointed out to selectmen that Cohasset has some of the toughest parking regulations around.

"If this is approved, don't come back to us for more parking because we won't be amenable to changes," Sturdy said.

Parking space zoning bylaws state that stores and other business establishments such as showrooms, public banks and service stations must offer one space per each 100 square feet of net floor area. An off-street space should have an area of lot less than 176 square feet plus access and maneuvering space, for exclusive use as a parking stall for one motor vehicle or two motorcycles whether inside or outside a structure.

Sturdy also said that should the expansion be approved, Staszko would have to put in a light at the end of Sohier Street, which has long been considered a less safe area due to combined traffic from 3A and the Stop and Shop plaza.

"The selectmen didn't vote to put it there," Sturdy said. "I don't know why."



Cook property abuts plaza

The only direct abutter to the Stop & Shop plaza owned by Donald Staszko, other than the town, is longtime town benefactress Jane Bancroft Cook.

Eight years ago, Cook swapped a parcel of her land at the back of the plaza for a portion of Staszko's land, which allowed for future expansion of the shopping center.

Staszko attorney Charles Humphreys told planning board members that Cook is supportive of the proposal. "Mrs. Cook feels it was best for her property to create a buffer higher up rather than down close," he added.

Cook's attorney, Roy Hammer of Hemenway & Barnes, said that it is an overstatement to say that his client gave permission.

"The property is held in a trust and the trustees have been involved in negotiations; not Mrs. Cook, so there is no question of legal capacity," said Hammer. "She appointed these people herself quite some number of years ago. It's a rather complicated situation. We're obviously looking out for her interest and trying to look out for the public interest as well. Staszko has certain rights which have been granted to him by the zoning bylaws and by the town. It's just a matter of trying to work out something that accommodates those competing interests."

Angry citizen leaves mark on beagle

Spray paint makes dog sick

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Someone doesn't like Colby, the beagle.

When he returned to his Rust Way home after being outside for about 20 minutes the night after Christmas, the dog had been painted with bright orange spray paint.

It made Colby, who ingested some of the paint, sick enough for a trip to the veterinarian who cleaned him up and put him on antibiotics.

Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy said the incident was no doubt an act of retaliation.

"I'm sure the dog's been a pain in the butt to someone down there," Murphy said.

But he cautioned that a malicious act like this could get the perpetrator in trouble. A conviction for cruelty to an animal can carry a $1,000 fine and a year in jail.

"That's the last thing someone wants when they are experiencing a problem with a dog," Murphy said.

Murphy urged anyone who's upset with a wandering dog to call the police at 383-1212 who will channel the calls to him. Murphy can also be reached at 383-9119.

"Thank goodness this incident didn't result in the death of the dog."

— Paul Murphy, Cohasset animal control officer

Colby, a beagle, takes a sun bath on the deck of his Rust Way home. The newsprint doesn't show it, but Colby's fur was spray painted bright orange by an angry citizen.

"Call me, I'll talk to the owner and impound the dog if necessary," he said. "Thank goodness this incident didn't result in the death of the dog."

Murphy, who came on board in October, plans to educate the public about the town's leash law which states a dog must be on a leash or under verbal control at all times.

Colby's owner Mary Hartwell readily admits that few are paying attention to the leash law in her part of town, including her. She said this was the second time Colby has been spray painted. The first incident occurred last August when someone used red paint.

"He's only out for a few minutes at a time," she said about the beagle that won her heart about two years ago when she saw him in a dog pound. "He's a good dog, so lovable."

At the time Hartwell adopted Colby, he weighed only 22 pounds and had heartworm.

"Someone had thrown him out of a truck," she recalled.

Murphy warns people not to take out their frustrations on the dog and he understands that in an affluent town, many residents spend big bucks on landscaping that they don't want damaged.

"The dog is just doing what's normal for a dog," he said. "If they're not restrained they'll roam around, scratch and relieve themselves.

"Hopefully this (painting incident) won't happen again," Murphy said. "But the bottom line is enforcing the leash law, it applies to everyone."

Sturdy to help tackle master plan

Robert Sturdy will represent his fellow planning board members when he joins the committee formed by selectmen to create a master plan for the town.

The planning board has not wanted the town to go forward with the project, given how complicated it is to forecast future trends in a town that doesn't have much space to begin with.

Planning board chairman Al Moore said that at least 50 percent of the town's land is made up of parks—the rest is either water, swamp, ledge or homes built on some of the latter. Moore pointed out that what may seem like a quick and easy solution when planning may turn out to be a disaster, or at the very least may set a precedent that causes several other residents to try to do the same.

"You have to tread very carefully on zoning issues," he said. Let's say for instance that the train had been allowed to go to downtown, then that would be worthwhile planning on how to accomplish it. But unless there is something hard planned, it's no more than great cocktail conversation. Look at the Benjamin Report, worth its weight in gold. When the town commissioned this report and it's just what they're talking about now, but it's all wet. It has roads going where they don't and a population number that doesn't exist."

Moore said that Sturdy has an uncanny ability to get to the heart of a planning problem and that he is pleased that he was willing to represent the committee on this matter.

HELP FOR EAR INFECTIONS

A little more than one-third of all visits to pediatricians in this country are due to recurring ear infections (otitis media) caused by moisture in the middle ear. In response, tube-implantation surgery may be suggested by medical doctors to drain the middle ear. Before following this invasive prescription, however, parents may want to try chiropractic care to correct misalignments in the cervical vertebrae to encourage normal fluid drainage from the middle ear. In one study of more than 300 children with recurrent ear infections, chiropractic care was associated with symptom-free ears within seven to nine days, which is on a par with antibiotic treatment. More notably, 80% of the children who received chiropractic care suffered no recurrence up to six months later.

Ear infections can be a distress signal, your body telling you something's out of balance. Pain relievers may temporarily turn off the alarm switch but usually don't put out the fire. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, however, we can diagnose your type of earache, treat its underlying causes, and help you learn how to prevent earaches in the future. Please call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor. Our "Mothers Morning Out" program can help you to keep your children and family as healthy as possible. Let us help you achieve optimum health and save you thousands of dollars a year on unnecessary medical expenses. Call us and find out more.

HINT: The chiropractic prescription for ear infections should be followed between bouts of infection.

A little more than one-third of all visits to pediatricians in this country are due to recurring ear infections (otitis media) caused by moisture in the middle ear. In response, tube-implantation surgery may be suggested by medical doctors to drain the middle ear. Before following this invasive prescription, however, parents may want to try chiropractic care to correct misalignments in the cervical vertebrae to encourage normal fluid drainage from the middle ear. In one study of more than 300 children with recurrent ear infections, chiropractic care was associated with symptom-free ears within seven to nine days, which is on a par with antibiotic treatment. More notably, 80% of the children who received chiropractic care suffered no recurrence up to six months later.

Ear infections can be a distress signal, your body telling you something's out of balance. Pain relievers may temporarily turn off the alarm switch but usually don't put out the fire. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, however, we can diagnose your type of earache, treat its underlying causes, and help you learn how to prevent earaches in the future. Please call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor. Our "Mothers Morning Out" program can help you to keep your children and family as healthy as possible. Let us help you achieve optimum health and save you thousands of dollars a year on unnecessary medical expenses. Call us and find out more.

HINT: The chiropractic prescription for ear infections should be followed between bouts of infection.

Resolutions from A to Z

If you're one of the many still pondering your New Year's resolution choices—walk more, save the planet or take your summer wardrobe off last year's exercise bike—take a peek at some fellow-Cohasseter's goals for 1999 for inspiration..

A• Dick Avery, advisory committee chairman: I don't tempt fate by making resolutions. When you lead a clean, pure life, you don't need 'em.

B• Mike Buckley, town treasurer: I'm too busy to even think about it.

Edward Brennock, Cohasset veteran: I want to lose weight for my daughter's June wedding so I can wear a tuxedo.

C• Rev. Cliff Cutler, St. Stephen's Church: Last year, I resolved to make more time for Sabbath rest and to be more balanced. This year, my resolution is to treat each day as the gift that it is.

D• Paul DeRensis, town counsel: Clean up Cohasset Heights Limited landfill. Last year's resolution was the same essentially. It's a long-running dispute and I'd like to bring peace to the town on that.

E• Bob Egan, town building inspector: It's not that I don't have things that need working on—I just don't do it.

F• Chris Ford, Osgood reuse committee chairman: To try to keep my desk organized. And of course, this is the year I'm going to walk to work but I've already found two excuses not to. Last year I resolved to do something about a health club, but I didn't visit much.

G• Martha Gjesteby, former selectwoman: I always wish good health and happiness for everyone and that's about it: health and happiness.

Edward Guild, sewer commission chairman: I don't make new year's resolutions; I've got enough to work without adding resolutions to the list!

H• Mark Haddad, town manager: I don't have any as of yet. I quit smoking eight months ago. It took me five months but I wanted to and now I have. I guess my new resolution is to keep it up.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund: Drink less coffee, eat more vegetables, visit my mother more, get to the State House before Mary Jeanette Murray (at least occasionally) and convince Mary Jeanette Murray to quit smoking. On a serious policy note, work harder to return some of the state's billion dollar surplus back to the taxpayers of the Commonwealth. That's probably the most important.

J• Herbert Jason, Cohasset lobsterman: I'm trying to get a monument built for the two lighthouse keepers who lost their lives 150 years ago and I'm hoping I can complete that this summer. And I'll do anything for the beauty of Cohasset. That's been my resolution for a few years.

L• Fire Chief Roger Lincoln: My new years resolution? Just trying to stay in business here.

M• State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray: I never make them. As a matter of fact, I've never really made a promise in my campaign except to serve my people well and always vote against tax increases. I might make a resolution as to whether I'm running earlier—announcing early on that I will or will not be a candidate either way. After each election, I think it will be the last. But then I think, ah, it keeps me out of trouble.

Al Moore, planning board chairman: I have one for every year to try and be fair. I think that's one of the most important things in life. If everyone tried to be fair, the world would be a better place.

N• Brian Noonan, police chief: First and foremost, I'd like to think I could keep the staff I have because you have all these scares about the override. Last year, I bought a juicer and have been into that for a long time. One of my main goals is to stay healthy.

P• Panagia Greek Orthodox Church's Father John Maharas: I decided to do everything positive thing this year, as in, 'I will do this' rather than giving things up because I know that I won't be able to do that.

R• Cassandra Rioux, school council member: I didn't make one this year. Isn't that terrible? It's usually always to lose weight. Sometimes it works and sometimes it doesn't.

S• Sue Straley, Cards & Shards owner: Last year I made a goal to do well in business and I went beyond that goal. I guess my new year's resolution would be to keep doing what we're doing. We sure appreciate everybody shopping locally, this year in particular.

Rick Shea, school committee chairman: Last year, I resolved to spend more time with family and get more exercise. I think I made progress on both of those, particularly on the latter, thanks to Sunday afternoon "Old Man Soccer." This year, I want to complete the renovation of my house without getting an ulcer and also to obtain town meeting approval for renovations of the Deer Hill and Middle-High School.

V• Leo Vercollone of Mobil-on-the-Run: Get everyone in Cohasset signed on for a free Mobil Speed Pass, or lose 10 pounds, or even five.

W• David Wadsworth, Cohasset Historic Society curator: I don't take those seriously because I never follow them

Y• Yuan Yen Do Karate Centers' instructor and manager, Brian Grey: I want to work on my flexibility.

Z• Lynn Zappolo, resident: I'd like to lose some weight!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Red Cross says thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

The American Red Cross South Area Office in Quincy would like to express sincere thanks to the members of the community who took part in the Holiday Stocking Program of 1998, for needy children.

We are told these are good times, economically, yet there were still many parents on the South Shore who faced the holiday season with dread, knowing they would not have the financial means to provide a little extra for their children. Made aware of this situation, many, many of you, reached deep down into your pockets and provided help for those not so fortunate. Through the generosity of the community, the American Red Cross was able to provide more than 1,500 magnificent stockings and gifts to children in our South Shore area who otherwise might not have received a holiday stocking this year.

Thanks to each and every one of you who made a contribution, because, together, we were able to light up the faces of needy children over this holiday period.

Wishing you a very happy and healthy 1999.

HEALTH NOTES

Cohasset's marine environment and health

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

Previous articles have discussed pollution in Little Harbor, and the study mandated by the Mass. Department of Environmental Protection (DEP). These activities are a part of a major battle by the state to keep ahead of the encroachments of pollution to our shoreline, streams, waterways, and lakes; resources which supply our drinking water and much of our food.

The work generally consists of identifying sources of pollution determining its effect on the environment and enacting laws to reduce it.

Frequently the analysis required involves a heavy dose of good science.

In Cohasset, there has been a long term effort to involve our kids in taking scientific data which will shed light on the condition of our streams and waterways. The Cohasset Gulf Association has for years supported an effort within the schools to have students obtain and analyze samples of our water bodies as an aid to understanding the effects of pollution from growth in our community.

The DEP mandated Little Harbor Study is an effort to accomplish similar goals, and the methods used by the students working in the Gulf and the soon-to-be selected contractor for the Little Harbor Study are the same. Accordingly, the Board of Health is working with the High School to enlist the support of students in data collection and analysis. This work will supplement the work of the contractor, not replace it.

Since two of the members of the Board of Health, Kevin Ulmer and Steve Bobo are members of the Lobster Lab which is dedicated to providing an environment for kids to learn to do research on marine biology, it should not come as a surprise that the Cohasset Lobster lab is coordinating the effort between the High School and the Little Harbor contractor.

After several meetings with the science department, the science curriculum now includes training by the EPA and the state on measurement techniques. The school will use the Board of Health's newly obtained computer maps of Cohasset in their studies and will follow procedures defined by the Board of Health and approved for use by the DEP for use by the Little Harbor Contractor.

Students will begin to receive training modules in February, and the Board of Health, through the Lobster Lab is seeking additional funding from grants for training, materials, equipment and supplies from the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs which, if received, will provide teacher funding through the summer and into next fall.

Wastewater Management Plan

At the next town meeting, the Board of Health expects to present a new comprehensive wastewater Management Plan to the voters. Unlike the previous plan, the new plan will be voluntary, it should meet the requirements of the DEP, and it is expected to pay for itself. The plan is designed to ignore all individual wastewater systems which are operating in a satisfactory manner and which represent no health risk to neighbors or the environment, and it gives credits for land which may be used to absorb wastewater; so called perkable land.

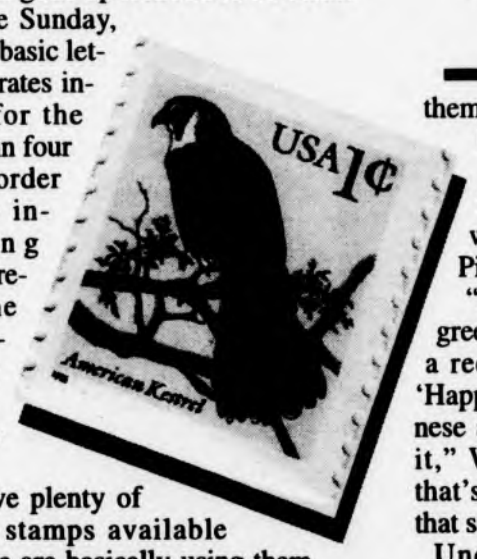
If the town approves the warrant, we will have a fair septic program which we can afford.

New postage hike draws a crowd

By Carol Britton Meyer and Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITERS

They only cost one cent, but penny postage stamps were a hot item at the post office in Cohasset Monday, now that postage has gone up from 32 to 33 cents.

Effective Sunday, first-class basic letter postal rates increased for the first time in four years in order to cover increasing costs and reduce the nationwide postal service's debts.



"We have plenty of one-cent stamps available and people are basically using them to add to their 32-cent stamps," postmaster Francine Winters said. "That's basically what they're coming in for."

While the 33-cent stamps were available early last week at a number of locations, including some supermarkets, a number of residents weren't aware of the rate increase until the weekend. In fact, 33-cent stamps have been on sale since November.

"We are having long lines," Winters said. "It started Saturday. No one seems upset about it; they seem to be pleasant."

The new 33-cent stamp that is available now, other than the one marked with an 'H," has a Chinese lunar New Year theme and celebrates the year of the Rabbit. (For those not familiar with eastern astrology, the year of the Rabbit is said to possess the gentle traits western astrologers ascribe to Pisces.)

By the end of the day Monday, 30,000 one-cent stamps and 107,000 33-cent stamps had been purchased in town.

"It's a picture of a green and gold rabbit on a red background with, 'Happy New Year' in Chinese and English written on it," Winters said. "So far, that's the only one available that says 33 cents."

Undenominated "H" rate stamps are also available, which can be used in lieu of ones marked 33 cents."

"Whenever there is a change in rates, they go to a letter," Winters explained. "The letter this year is 'H.' The next rate hike will be 'I.' The first stamp had an 'A' on it and was made available May 22, 1978. That's when they started the letters on stamps. Back then, the 'A' stamps were 15 cents."

Some supermarkets and other businesses which ordinarily sell postage stamps were caught short when customers asked to purchase one-cent stamps but were only able to buy the new 33-cent stamp.

By the end of the day Monday, 30,000 one-cent stamps and 107,000 33-cent stamps had been purchased in town.

Mail not carrying enough postage will be delivered with a "postage due" message. If the recipient refuses to pay the extra amount, the letter will be returned to the person or company that sent it.

One-ounce letters require the extra postage, but a one-cent reduction in the charge for each additional ounce has also been implemented. Postal customers will now be charged 22 cents for each additional ounce instead of 23 cents.

While the new rates affect priority mail and parcel post, there is no additional charge for international mail.

A penny doesn't seem like much to send a letter across the country, for example, but companies which mail out thousands of letters annually could feel a slight pinch. (For every 10,000 letters mailed, the sender must pay an additional $100.)

After Jan. 1, winter should just go away

TWENTY SOMETHING

KIM MCGRATH

Now that the holidays are over and the corresponding and obligatory niceties have been neatly put away, along with ornaments and stockings, I feel at liberty to embark upon my great abhorrence of winter.

My mother taught me that hate was a strong word, so let me say, without a moment of hesitation, I hate winter.

I was born in New England and I have never liked, and will never like, winter. I love the other seasons though, especially spring and fall, so moving to a winter-free zone is not an option. Instead I must stay and for three, sometimes four, months endure the enemy.

And while we have been fortunate thus far this year, I know it's coming. Just when we are get comfortable. Just when we start to believe it won't come. It comes. It comes with a vengeance.

And this is the worst time. I am able to muster a smidgen of affection for winter during the holidays. It makes them seemingly more festive. And maybe say, for a long afternoon after the holidays. But after Jan. 1, I really feel it should just go away.

I just don't see the purpose in the design of winter. Why was it created? To give lazy animals the justification to sleep for two full months?

I also don't enjoy any of the prevalent and popular winter-related pastimes: skiing, ice skating, falling while walking to car in the morning.

My reasons for hating winter are plentiful. I have hair that never fully recovers after being smothered by a hat. I loathe turtlenecks and big, bulky sweaters. I despise the thought of being held hostage by winter and forced to stay in with running noses and itchy, dry skin.

Winter brings about so many things I detest. Hot chocolate, for instance. Hot chocolate has a drinkable shelf life time of approximately three seconds. Hot chocolate can be viewed like this: too hot, too hot, too hot, drinkable, too cold.

Also winter proves that comfort beats out fashion. It's as if fashion designers shrugged their shoulders and resigned, "If clothing isn't going to look good, why even try?".

And so they attached pompom's on the tops of hats. Fringe to the end of scarves. And colored faux fur to anything that isn't nailed to the floor: jacket collars, sweaters, boots. For goodness sake, they created ear-muffs.

They used synthetic waterproof materials to make boots. (I don't care how cool you are, boots make everyone look dorky.)

Winter is the root of so much evil: car problems and traffic jams, chapped lips and cold finger tips, lost gloves.

Winter prompts pet owners to force their animals to wear sweaters and causes mothers to stuff their babies, like sausages, into ill-fitted snow suits.

Everybody smells like wet dogs and are constantly cold and wet and late and crabby. Plus electric bills skyrocket.

Even as a child, I took little joy in winter. Playing in the snow was always fun for considerably less time than it took to get dressed to play in the snow.

As a child, getting dressed to play in the snow took about three hours. (And once dressed, one retained roughly only a fourth of the normal range of motion of their arms and legs.)

After playing in the snow for typically less than five minutes, I either had to go to the bathroom or had sustained enough of an injury (a bump on my head from colliding into a tree while sledding, a sprained ankle from falling while ice skating, a blooding nose obtained by a snowball thrown by the neighborhood bully; winter injuries are plentiful) that I would want to go back inside.

But before I could enter the house, I needed to strip out of all my wet clothing, per ordinance of the house rules. I would stand, whining my protest loudly, in the sub zero porch.

Only on the last layer, with Glad Wrap plastic baggies on my feet, was I allowed to enter.

Then I would sit in the den, by the fire, burning my tongue on hot chocolate, and dreaming of

Effect of citizen's water contract article disputed

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The water commissioners believe they have the legal right to award contracts for services and work. The selectmen believe the town manager has the legal right to award contracts for all departments, including the water and sewer commissions. Because of this disagreement, a group of citizens has proposed a town meeting article giving the water commission the exclusive right to award its own contracts. But Town Manager Mark Haddad disagrees. He said the article is worded in a way that would strip him of all contract awarding authority except for boards directly under the selectmen.

The sewer commissioners are also fighting what they see as an attempt by town officials to strip away their contract awarding authority. The sewer commission has chosen a different approach than the water commission: they went to court. The sewer commissioners, acting as private citizens, went to Norfolk Superior Court on Monday to make sure they retain their right to award contracts. A judge heard arguments from lawyers for the three commissioners and the town before taking the matter under advisement this week.

One of the key provisions of the town manager act was to centralize purchasing functions to save money and achieve better efficiency. But the water commissioners believe they are an independent board created by an act of the state legislature and that they do not fall under the town manager's jurisdiction. Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said the article is being presented as a citizen's article so the selectmen cannot alter the wording or prevent its inclusion in the warrant.

The first three names on the citizen's petition belong to McNabb, and water commissioners Richard Muncey and Robert Kasameyer. The fourth signature belongs to former water commissioner Fred Koed.

"We saw what the selectmen did to two of our articles at the last town meeting, adding language to articles about selling water to other towns," McNabb said. "They added language including the town manager in the article, which they later had to admit was wrong. Basically, they said it was a legal decision but it was really political. With a citizen's article, we can make sure it gets into the warrant without any changes."

Haddad sees the citizen's article a bit differently. He said the article deletes the phrase "and all other applicable procedures, statutes and bylaws" from the contract authority section of the town manager act. This deletion strips Haddad of much of his contract awarding authority, he said.

"They deleted that language without replacing it with anything," Haddad said. "I'm sure that's intentional. This has nothing to do with whether the water commission issues contracts. In effect, this decentralizes the purchasing functions of the town manager. We will end up going back to decentralized purchasing. It's really up to the voters. Do they want to go back to the way things used to be?"

In other water commission related business, the commissioners are planning to submit an article seeking about $400,000 to restore the Elm Meadow well field as a permanent water source, to achieve Y2K compliance, to study the effects of CHL on the environment, and to perform a facilities audit of the entire water plant. McNabb said $220,000 of the $400,000 will come from a state grant and the remaining $180,000 would have to come from borrowing. McNabb said the borrowing shouldn't be a problem because the cost of the water tank is expected to come in about $400,000 under budget.

water commission's request for $1.4 million to build a new 2-million-gallon water tank on Bear Hill next to the town's other tank. Water commissioner's said Cohasset needed a new tank so workers could drain the other unit for cleaning. Another reason offered for building a new tank was to provide additional fire-fighting water reserves to ensure public safety. But residents living in sight of Bear Hill angrily protested the construction of another tank in their neighborhood. Opponents of the Bear Hill site petitioned the town to place the second tank on Scituate Hill, which overlooks Route 3A.

The water commission opposed Scituate Hill at first because it would cost more than $1.4 million, and result in construction delays while engineers and consultants surveyed the site. In 1997, town meeting approved an extra $200,000 for the tank so the water commission could have the option to purchase or take land on Scituate Hill.

Developer Noel Collins had been working with Susi to develop Scituate Hill into residential housing. On earlier occasions, Collins hinted that Susi might sell the town a parcel of land for $1 if the two parties could find a site they both liked. But Susi could not agree with water commissioners on a mutually acceptable location for the tank.

McNabb and Water Commissioner Richard "Chip" Muncey discussed the eminent domain taking at a Jan. 7 meeting. Chairman Rob Kasameyer was unable to attend that meeting. All three commissioners met on Jan. 11 and approved the taking.

McNabb said Susi's attorney, Rich Henderson, attended the Jan. 11 meeting to try and negotiate a last minute deal. One of the possibilities Henderson discussed was giving the town land in exchange for the rights to lease the top of the new tank for communications antennas. McNabb said the water commissioners do not like that deal. Telecommunications companies might be willing to lease antenna rights for as much as $50,000 per year. But there is no indication that the top of Scituate Hill is a good location for telecommunications companies or if the zoning board would even approve such a proposal.

"I think we'll go back to Rich Henderson and tell him we're not interested in giving up potential antenna rights in exchange for land," McNabb said.

McNabb estimates that the 70-foot tank will cost $1.065 million to build. The parcel of land the water commissioners chose is not on the highest elevation of the hill. The land is in a spot that will allow the water commission to build a tank that is the same size as the unit on Bear Hill.

Appraisers working for the water commission estimate the value of the land at $50-$60,000 per acre. McNabb said the appraisal may have to be updated, but he doubts the land is valued anywhere near the $300,000 per acre that commissioners said Susi claims the property is worth. If the water commission completes the taking, Susi cannot block the seizure but he can dispute the price in court.

McNabb said he expects to have the new tank built and working by August, 2000.

Schools to make a case for 10 percent budget hike

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

A 10 percent budget increase over the next three years — as opposed to the six percent anticipated by selectmen based on last year's $8,190,366 budget — is a hefty request; but schools superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey thinks that the school committee can make a good enough case to selectmen, town manager Mark Haddad and town meeting to get it approved.

School principals presented their "wish lists" to Malvey and the committee in a formal meeting last week. All three principals summarized needs derived from the same issues: a rise in student population, curriculum changes due to MCAS, building renovations (hoped for in Deer Hill and the middle-high school) and incoming new technology, will warrant a greater increase in budget spending than in previous years.

Joseph Osgood Elementary School principal Marilee Cantelmo needs more texts to back up the MCAS studies, as well as more funds to help prepare second and third grade students for MCAS and the new state-required reading tests for third-graders. "We need to line our curriculum with that," she said.

Cantelmo expects 30 new students to enroll by the end of this summer, in keeping with recent enrollment trends over the last three years.

Changes in student enrollment also prompted Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan to request an extra lunch period to alleviate overcrowding, as well as more support staff to help cover the extra period.

"We had 15 classrooms last year and next year we'll have 16," he said. "We need an increase for an activity aide for recess. We have three now, but with one more, we can also cover the extra lunch period. We need the extra supervision."

Callahan suggested bringing on an extra substitute in as a permanent staff member. He pointed out that in the course of the school year, the 50 staff members of his school are all present on only 31 days of the year.

"There are a lot of valid reasons people are out and since it's difficult to get hold of a substitute, it might be good to have one there all year," Callahan said. "It would be good for the teachers and for the students, who would all know the substitute." The expected salary for the new hire would be $14,465.

Callahan would also like to bring on team leaders for all three schools' staff members, including special education. Team leaders typically earn $3,000 and take care of seeing to it that odds and ends are taken care of.

Texts books are a concern for Callahan, as well as Cantelmo. They would like new texts that more accurately reflect changes brought to standard curriculum since the Education Reform Act in 1993.

Middle-high school principal Curtis Collins wants to see improvements to his facilities carried through, even if that means canceling out other requests on his wish list. Other items petitioned for included computer applications and keyboarding courses to accommodate new technology use; moneys needed for block scheduling (which Collins stated was basically set as is); more staffing and changes in curriculum for the middle school program; and the reinstatement of a ninth-grade camp program that is a fun gateway to high school.

Collins said that the camp would need to be paid for by the school budget so that all students could attend.

Committee member Joseph McElroy said that the 10 percent budget increase is essential.

"We can put our heads in the sand like some of these changes aren't going on, but they are," he said. "If we continue to depend on our residential real estate tax base, only the affluent will be able to handle the burden and our community will lose its diversity."

"I don't think its news to people that something needs to be done with Deer Hill and the high school," Malvey said in an interview this week. "The community took a positive step with additional funds for technology and that will continue. But how we continue to operate will determine the success of our future."

As always, any rise in budget increases the already heavy tax burden felt by tax payers, who do not receive the benefit of local industry dollars coming back to the town.

School committee Chairman Rick Shea, who announced last week that he will not run for a second term due to time constraints on his new job, will do his best to see the new budget proposal through.

"Hopefully, before I depart we'll have an approved budget that meets at least minimum requirements for continuing some of the important initiatives that we've been undertaking in the last few years," he said.

"I think what I'm impressed with when I look at where we're going and what we're trying to fund is how important it is to have a business tax base," he added. "Clearly, our problem as a town is that we're overly dependent on residential taxes. Of course, the town continues to expand its number of residential properties, which adds to the revenue, but to the expenditure, too, because those families will send their kids to school. That costs."

Shea suggests that the ideal from a tax point of view would be to expand the business tax base and hints that at some point in the future, he might get back into town governance matters.

Malvey stresses that it's the school committee's and his responsibility to make a case for the new budget.

"We know that the resources may not always be there and we're very honest about that," he said. "But I think it's our responsibility to make a case for this. Our student population has shown a slight increase and so we need new staff and for support and academic areas. The texts need updating, and that's pretty much driven by Ed Reform. If people will listen to the message, hopefully we can grow over the next years."

That means the owner of the average home, which is assessed at $341,000, would pay about $5594 in real estate taxes FY 2000, which starts July 1. That's about $100 more a year than would be the case with a $700,000 override.

Haddad said when he prepared the budget he thought 6 percent was a realistic hike.

"When you start looking at 10 percent, it gets unrealistic," he said.

Selectmen looked at areas on the municipal side of the budget for possible cuts but realized their discussion was premature without firm numbers from the school department.

So they tabled further budget talks until they meet jointly with the advisory committee and school committee tentatively scheduled for 7:30 p.m., Wednesday in the selectmen's office.

Interested citizens should check with Haddad at 383-4105 for a possible change depending on the availability of the different boards for that night.

Haddad said it is important to point out that $133 of the real estate tax bill increase on the average-valued home is not attributable to the override. In other words, the taxes would go up by that amount even if the override fails at the polls.

In the fall, plans are to ask voters for an additional $7 million to pay for upgrades and renovations to the Deer Hill and middle/high school through a debt exclusion override. A debt exclusion is spread out over the life of a bond issue and the tax increase goes away when the debt is retired. A general override, like the one being proposed this year, is a permanent tax increase and funds the operating budget. The $7 million would be used to bring the schools up to compliance with the Americans With Disabilities Act, to replace roofs, boilers and other major items.

Prop. 2-1/2 is a state law that caps the amount a town can raise its tax levy in any given year to 2-1/2 percent without a positive vote at the polls.

The changing face of U.S. ice hockey

they saw us in the Olympics," said King. "What we try to do in the book is give an introduction to the sport and tell people how we got started on this road."

And King said it's not just the young that are picking up the game.

It's more like the young at heart.

"I was working at a fantasy camp in Virginia last year with women in their 40s and 50s who were picking up the game for the first time. I thought that was the greatest thing ever. They were playing because their kids were or they just wanted to get out and skate," said King. "That's awesome."

Both Dunn and King carry an impressive hockey resume and are anxiously awaiting their invitation to play on the upcoming world championship tourney team in Helsinki, Finland this March, which is their first step in getting back on the squad that the will set out to defend the gold medal at the Salt Lake City Olympic Games in 2002.

Dunn, a graduate of the University of New Hampshire, is an excellent skater who helped carry her college team to an ECAC title while amassing enough points to be ranked 13th on the career scoring list for the conference.

While at Brown, King was the Ivy League MVP for three seasons and was chosen the ECAC player of the year in 1997. She is the all-time leading scorer at Brown and was tied for the top spot with three others on the Olympic team.

Both have dreams of defending the gold medal on their home soil.

"That would be an unbelievable opportunity," said King. "That's the biggest thing on my mind right now."

For Dunn's part, she couldn't think of a better way to re-kindle some memories than to go back and do it all over again.

"I can't honestly say that I remember a great deal about the championship came (against Canada)," said Dunn with a laugh. "I remember standing on the ice afterwards and skating around the rink looking for my parents and seeing all of our fans. The biggest thing was seeing Cammi (team captain Cammi Granato) get her medal. She was there from the beginning through all the ups and downs and it was some great to see her get the gold medal."

And she'll take all of the extras that go with the job of representing your country as well. Her photo on the cover of a Wheaties box, the appearance on the Late Night with David Letterman show and the constant wave of well-wishers on the phone and at your door, it's all part of the total package.

"My mom stayed home during the Olympics, so when I called he she said that everything just went nuts after we won the gold medal and that I should treasure my last moments of privacy," remembered Dunn. "I was like 'Whatever, mom'. We had no clue what was going on back at home.

"Then, after the games about 15 of us from the team are in Hawaii for a little vacation and people would come up and ask us if we were the women's hockey team. But we have nothing red, white and blue on and nothing that would indicate we were in fact the hockey team."

"I think it was the pasty white skin," added King.

Dreams: the forgotten language

Dreams have been called God's forgotten language. They arise from the sacred ground of our being, the place where the rivers of self and world mingle to offer us possibilities of becoming more whole and connected with the greater life.

On Wednesday, Jan. 20, from 7:30 to 9 p.m., the Task Force on Spirituality and Healing of the Second Congregational Church will present a program entitled "Opening Sacred Ground through Dreamwork," with speaker Dr. Ramsay Raymond.

This evening talk will provide a framework and a few exercises for working with dreams to access the healing wisdom and sacred energies of this "ground" in our own lives. Bring a dream and wear comfortable clothing.

There is no admission charge, but free-will donations are accepted to help defray costs. The Second Congregational Church is located on the east side of the Common, next to town hall. Brochures for the upcoming 1999 winter/spring programs are available at the church.

School board chairman won't seek reelection

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

School committee chairman Rick Shea announced that he will not run for a second term, citing increased time demands from his new job.

"I'm sorry to have to say this but I'll be starting a new job in February, which will require more of my time and traveling," Shea told school committee members last week. "I encourage any of you with an interest in maintaining the high quality of the schools to seek this office."

Shea is presently the "senior" member of the committee, comprised of volunteers with no more than two years on the board individually. Schools superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey has been in office only six months.

This is the third year in a row that a school committee members have decided not to seek another term.

Last year, Maureen Jerz stepped down after one term and the year before that, both Jim Kirk and JoAnn Chittick decided not to run for reelection.

Kirk announced in October of 1996 that he would not run for reelection to the school board due to the time pressures of managing his own company.

At that time, Kirk said that rancorous public debate about the new Joseph Osgood Elementary School project had made him question his decision to be involved with the committee, though it was not the reason he decided not to run for reelection.

Ex-committee member Chittick would agree. In an interview this week, Chittick explained that it's not so much stress as consideration of personal life that leads people to give up their committee post after serving only one term.

"It's job requirements and maybe family," said Chittick. "In my case, I'd been working in the schools for 20 years and my youngest was through the system so I felt it was time to work on my art, which is what I do."

Chittick maintains that her fellow-committee members had worked well together, shared responsibility and respected one another and their opinions.

Shea's announcement left the board momentarily speechless, but for vice chairman Kathy Ofsthun, who said she'd reserve comment on his statement and put on a ready-to-debate posture.

"We were all somewhat surprised by his leaving," said Ofsthun this week. "Certainly, if he's taking on a new job that will require a lot of traveling and time, then we understand his departure. But it's too bad; I think he's been an excellent leader. He's been terrific and I'll miss him."

"On a personal level, he was easy to work with, has a marvelous sense of humor and can deal with issues in a calm and deliberate manner. I'll miss that, but I wish him the best in his future endeavors."

— Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey

Ofsthun doesn't think that the relatively beginner status of the committee matters is cause for concern since board members sometimes draw on past members, such as Ralph Kidder, Kirk, Chittick, Nancy Sandell and Maureen Jerz.

"I've been called, but not that frequently," Jerz said. "Those of us who have been on the committee are happy to answer a question that might come up background-wise. On the whole, people generally want to come to these meetings to serve without an agenda and do a good job for the town. They frequently bring experience from other volunteer work on other boards. As for Rick, I think he's done a terrific job in the time he's been there and I'm sorry to see him go."

That sentiment was echoed by Malvey, who pointed out that he has worked with many school committee chairmen in his years in education and thinks Shea has the qualities that would be looked for in a chairman.

"He's an excellent member and chairman, easy to work with, intelligent, articulate and able to cut through the details and get to the main points of issues," Malvey said. "He's very adept at bringing his business skills to his role as a chairman and dealing with the big picture, while maintaining an eye for detail. On a personal level, he was easy to work with, has a marvelous sense of humor and can deal with issues in a calm and deliberate manner. I'll miss that, but I wish him the best in his future endeavors."

Shea will begin work in February at a biotechnology start-up business in Kendall Square. The hours and some degree of travel time will not allow for the flexibility he enjoyed on his last job, which allowed for the morning or evening meetings.

"It's just the time and the flexibility," explained Shea in a phone interview this week about his decision not to see a second term. "I've really enjoyed the job. I wish I could continue."

Shea counts the hiring of Malvey as superintendent and obtaining the money for the next phase of technology for the schools as the main highlights of his term.

Before he departs, he would like to see an approved budget in place that meets at least minimum requirements for continuing with the initiatives that the committee has undertaken in the last few years.

"I think we're well on our way to having a successful contract negotiation with the teachers for the next three-year contract," he said. "I am looking forward to the budget process. I think it's critical. I want to make sure that internally we've gone through a rigorous process to develop a budget that we can be comfortable with but will also fit within the town's framework."

Shea discussed an education budget currently under construction by Malvey that would call for a cost per pupil that's comparable to towns whose achievement in the top tier in the state, such as Weston and Norwell.

"I think our cost was significantly lower than those towns that did well on the MCAS," he said. Cohasset's spending is aiming for top tier status, but its spending and expending is closer to the average level per student.

"But we've managed because we have teachers and administrators that are very dedicated and maybe work with less support, both educational and administrative, than you might have in other school systems," said Shea.

The give and take of working with a board and the community, as well as learning enough about an $8 million operation to present it at town meeting are the main things Shea enjoyed.

His advice to the next chairman on board? "I'd say just understand the business of the schools and love what you're doing."

For Your Health

A new you in a new year

By Esther Csapo Rastegari
CORRESPONDENT

Are you a statistic? If you made a new year's resolution, someone somewhere has got you pegged.

Maybe you are one of 59 percent of women or 32 percent of men who made the resolution to lose weight. Or perhaps you will be one of the 14 percent select few who, come March, will still be working on their resolution; stepping over the other 86 percent who have returned to life as it was in December of 1998. Well, it doesn't have to be that way; success can be yours.

It's not that there's anything wrong with resolutions, but more often than not they are unrealistic. On Dec. 31 we are firmly attached to our recliners, and on Jan. 1 we expect to run a marathon.

Success in resolutions is like success in any other aspect of our lives: it requires knowledge, motivation, and a plan. So, here's a plan for 1999: instead of trying to make six changes in one month, try addressing one change a month for the next twelve months.

The following change suggestions are in no particular order, as we each have our own set of issues to work through.

1) Sleep better
2) Reduce stress with yoga or tai chi
3) Reduce stress with breathing, visualization or meditation techniques
4) Improve eating habits
5) Positive outlook
6) Exercise
7) Better time management
8) Reduce clutter
9) New career direction
10) Try a new hobby or skill
11) Preventive personal health

Sleep better. Do you wake up tired or refreshed? Do you need an alarm clock to wake you up, or do you wake up before you have to? It's hard to get through the day when we are exhausted. Experts agree on the following helpful habits: keep regular wake-up and bedtimes, even on the weekends; don't exercise in the evening- it's too stimulating; use ?white noise? such as a fan or sound machine to block out disruptive street noises; make the room dark with heavy drapes or shades.

Waking up exhausted can also be a sign of a potentially serious problem called sleep apnea, in which you temporarily stop breathing for seconds at a time frequently during the night. If this could be the case, speak to your doctor and consider a sleep study in a sleep lab. A good book for further study is Say Goodnight to Insomnia, by Gregg D. Jacobs, PhD from Harvard.

Yoga or Tai Chi. While yoga and tai chi can be learned from books and video tapes, getting started safely is really best done with a qualified teacher. Many health centers offer these classes, and you may not need to be a member to take a class. Adult education classes in your own town may also offer classes. If possible, ask to observe a class, or take a free introductory class. Look for the following clues: Is the teacher knowledgeable, helpful and giving individual attention? Is the atmosphere friendly and clean (your nose will touch the ground!)? Will it be convenient to go one or two times a week? Is the room crowded? What are the credentials of the instructor - does she or he continue to study with a "Master"? If it's not possible to take a class, consider purchasing the American Yoga Association's Beginner Manual. It offers a gradual course through which you progress at your own pace. It is the best "at-home" yoga book I've seen.

Breathing, visualization and meditation. Research studies are finally confirming the health benefits of these mind/body techniques. A clear, specific "how-to" book to teach you techniques such as progressive relaxation, meditation, visualization, breathing and more is called The Relaxation & Stress Reduction Workbook by M. Davis, PhD, E. R. Eshelman, MSW, and M. McKay, PhD. It includes a chart to help you evaluate how much stress you are under, as well as a chart indicating which techniques are most helpful for which problem. It even guides you through making your own relaxation tape.

Improved eating habits. Research now abounds telling us that diets don't work, and that up to 98 percent of those losing weight gain it back. The key seemsto be in making lifestyle changes that work for us as individuals, rather than adopting a rigid list of do's and don'ts that makes us feel deprived. Reducing our intake of non-foods and eating more fruits and vegetables is a good first step. Hearty soups and vegetarian meals once or twice a week can meet the "5-a-day" goal — try Better Homes and Garden's Soups and Stews. Sharon Claessens' The Lose Weight Naturally Cookbook is a good transition for someone trying to move from calorie-counting to real foods in calorie "categories" Recipes use fresh, real ingredients, no sugar or artificial sweeteners, and very little white flour.

Positive outlook. Norman Vincent Peale's The Power of Positive Thinking is certainly a classic, albeit "weighty" reference in this area. A more simple-but-useable book is Mind Power into the 21st Century by John Kehoe, which emphasizes the untapped power within each of us to influence our lives in a positive fashion. It has examples we can relate to, as well as exercises to improve our skills. Thinking Body, Dancing Mind by Chungliang Al Huang and Jeremy Lynch is a beautifully written book on TaoSports for extraordinary performance in athletics, business, and life. The style is part philosophy, part real-life story telling, with some examples from athletes overcoming obstacles. Chapters include: beliefs - do your beliefs limit your actions or open your life, intuition, fear of failure, fear of success, balance and simplicity.

Exercise. We all have our individual starting points. For some of us, moving five minutes without stopping would be an improvement, while others of us are scheduling triathalons. Yet, we all share something in common: the motivation to exercise consistently. For those starting out, be realistic. Starting slowly and building up gradually decreases your risk of injury; and injury is a major player in stopping the exercise routine. A great goal-setting tool is in The Relaxation & Stress Reduction Workbook by Davis, Eshelman and McKay.

Time Management. Are you constantly rushing, frequently late, and impatient? Do you procrastinate and have difficulty setting goals? Once again, The Relaxation & Stress Reduction Workbook will help (here's one book that can help meet most, if not all, of those resolutions). Poor time management add frustration and stress, and decreases our productivity. Learn how to make time to just kick back and relax, or make time for what is important to you.

Reduce Clutter. In a size not bigger than two decks of cards and for only $4.99, Simply Organized! How to simplify your complicated life by Connie Cox & Cris Evatt, explains how to eliminate clutter and organize space to increase efficiency. In a no-fluff-real-information style they move room to room and include shopping ahead and responsible kids!

Career changes. Is it time to change jobs/careers, or will the changes you are making personally be enough? What Color Is Your Parachute? by Richard Nelson Bolles is a classic, guiding you through answering ads and understanding that employers eliminate resumes before selecting any. The What Color Is Your Parachute Workbook is a more streamlined version helping you figure out what fields you already know about, the types of people you like working with, what work rewards are important to you, and short and long-term goals.

Perhaps you want to stay where you are, but need negotiating skills. Getting To Yes, by Richard Fisher, William Ury & Bruce Patton of the Harvard Negotiation Project may help. In showing how to separate the problem from the people, they explain how blaming is counterproductive. Under attack, the other side will become defensive and will resist what you have to say. They will cease to listen, or they will strike back with an attack of their own?. Sound familiar? We negotiate everyday; whether fighting as kids for the bigger piece of cake, or with our spouse over where to go once that precious babysitter is confirmed, or at work. If you need help identifying the stressors at work and how they feed into your feelings, thoughts, and behaviors, try The Relaxation & Stress Reduction Workbook.

New hobbies and skills. Maybe you need more skills with which to attempt a career change, or maybe you want to stimulate your mind, or find a new group of friends. Local adult education classes are a great way to go. Inexpensive and nearby they offer a wide range of topics from computer skills, languages, and arts and crafts.

Your health. Eating well, exercising and reducing the stress in your life are only part of the plan. Are you up-to-date on your immunizations? Tetanus needs a booster every ten years. Are you at risk for Hepatitis B? Do you lose time from work because of the flu? Check with your doctor about getting immunized. Have you had a mammogram and a Pap Smear recently? When was your last teeth cleaning?

Perhaps this list was your list, perhaps reading it helped generate your own list.

Young icemen are taking their lumps

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

How is the young Cohasset High hockey team doing so far this season?

The youngsters are learning their craft the hard way this season, showing a record of no wins and four losses. But no one knows it's a young team better than their coach, Dennis Walsh.

"We're taking our lumps," said Walsh. "When you're playing a freshman goalie and freshmen forwards and freshmen defensemen in varsity games, you know you're in for some major trouble.

"You have to keep in mind the school had no varsity hockey last year, so we're playing a lot of youngsters as we try to get back to varsity hockey."

Although the Cohasset team is not in a league, it is playing varsity games at the rate of one a week.

The Skippers were scheduled to play Hull High's hockey team Wednesday night, with high hopes of breaking the losing streak.

In its last game prior to the meeting with Hull, Cohasset was stopped by Abington High, 10-4. However, the coach did have an optimistic note that he really did want to talk about.

"We recently had a scrimmage against Rockland High, and we looked pretty good. In fact we won the scrimmage. The kids really played like a team in that scrimmage and it looked as though we might be turning the corner," said the coach.

Walsh continued, "Some of the youngsters really looked like they were catching on and catching on a lot faster than even I could have hoped.

"All the positions were hitting pretty good, from goalie to forward

Goliath didn't fall on Monday night, but his knees were buckling.

The gutsy Cohasset Skippers forced the Norwell Clippers, who share a #1 ranking in the South Shore League, to an exhausting three overtimes before finally falling 89-86. Led by captains Jamie DeMichele and Alex Russell, and backed by a raucous crowd, Cohasset came within a shade of downing the highly touted Clippers.

CHS jumped out to an early 16-10 lead, behind the marksmanship of DeMichele and hustle all around on both ends of the court. Raheem Shepard has been Cohasset's defensive pillar and most effective rebounder this year, but got in foul trouble early and would eventually foul out.

But the home team's effort was truly a whole team effort, as all eleven players who dressed saw action. Matt O'Reilly finished with eleven points, including Cohasset's first four in the first overtime. His sweet shot could become a weapon for CHS as the season progresses. The development of Khalil

Madyun continued as well, as Madyun's second half rebound-

Gymnasts tumble against Scituate

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Even before the season began, the Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics team knew it was going to come up on the short end of its Jan. 4 tilt against Pilgrim Conference juggernaut, Scituate.

So you'd expect the girls would head into the meet relaxed and loose, knowing they had nothing to lose but everything to gain against the cream of the conference crop.

Instead, Cohasset-Norwell was a little on edge, and, head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni believes, a bit intimidated. The result was a disappointing overall score in a 125.95-113.2 loss to the Lady Sailors.

"They just really weren't into it," said Cohasset-Norwell head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni. "Probably because they knew they were up against a team that they really didn't have a chance at beating."

The loss dropped Cohasset's record to 1-2 on the season, the lone win coming in the season-opener against once-powerful Randolph.

The team did get its usual strong performances from Kristin Sheerin, though. Sheerin took second place to the conference's best gymnast, Gina Verge in every event. Sheerin was runner-up to Verge on bars (7.6), beam (8.3), vault (8.1), floor (8.25) and the all-around (32.25).

The beam was a bright spot for Cohasset-Norwell with an overall team improvement of 1.5. The Norwell contingent also showed it is heading in the right direction. Julie Callahan upped her best score on the vault by 1.2 points, Alison Duffney added .2 to her floor routine and Pattie LaCroix's vault jumped nearly a full point at .9. LaCroix, enjoyed her best night of the season, improving .5 on bars and .3 on the beam. Beth Jackson, in her first meet of the season, looked strong on both the bars and vault.

With Verge out of the picture in the Jan. 6 meet against Hanover, Sheerin dominated the Lady Indians by taking first in every event. Cohasset-Norwell threw a big scare into Hanover and made a strong run at their second win of the season. However, the Lady Indians were able to overcome a .1 deficit at halftime and hold off Cohasset-Norwell to pull out a 117.1-115.4 win.

Sheerin led 1-2 Cohasset-Norwell finishes on the bars (7.5) and floor (8.4), and 1-3 showings on beam (8.2) and all-around (32.4). Carlie Carter finished second to Sheerin on the bars (7.4) and third in the all-around (29.3). Captain Tara Hettstrom was third on beam (7.4) and second on her strongest event, the floor exercise (8.1).

Cohasset-Norwell was scheduled to meet a much-improved Hingham squad Jan. 12 at Cohasset High.

and back to defense. The scrimmage was very encouraging, not only to me but also to the kids."

The coach added, "Chris Caron, our freshman goalie did a great job in the goal. He really showed some growth in that scrimmage.

"On defense I was happy with the play of Will Pendergast and Tim Straunghm. Two other players who looked really good for us were Ken Portanova and Jay Rasmusen.

"The Hull game should show us a lot, and we're going to play a second game this week, taking on Norwell Saturday. The extra work could prove beneficial to the kids.

"We're playing some good teams, so the kids are getting a real taste of varsity hockey."

In the Abington game, the Green Wave's Rick Baggett was just too much to handle, coming up with three goals for a hat trick.

"It was a learning experience," said Walsh. "We knew going into the season it was going to be rough, especially after being away from varsity hockey last year.

"However, the kids are coming along, and next year we should be in a league which would help out immensely."

In the meantime, Cohasset is going to be involved in some good games and some bad games.

If the scrimmage against Rockland is any indication, the good games may start coming along at a faster clip.

Skippers drop a hoop heartbreaker to Norwell

ing and post defense efforts were key to Cohasset's late charge. Center Craig Parker shared time with Madyun and played his best game of the year as well.

Point guard Daniel Trowers, who chalked up thirteen points, was at his most effective during the trio of four minute extra periods. His ability to penetrate and make decisions in the air helped Cohasset attack the Norwell defense. Repeatedly, Trowers dribble penetrated to the middle of the paint, elevated, and either dished down low to Russell or Madyun, kicked out to DeMichele on the wing, or lofted a soft shot over the rim.

Again, Paul Hussey was a crowd favorite as he stepped up his defense and rebounding. A game highlight came in the first OT, when Huss leapt for an offensive rebound and simply flicked the ball through the net at the height of his jump. Hussey would finish with eight points, half of which came during the overtimes.

DeMichele dropped a cool 31 points, scoring from the paint, beyond the arc, and with pull up jumpers. He tallied the final seven points in regulation, fueling a 10-2 Skipper run which sent the game into overtime.

DeMichele also put forth a Ray Bourque-esque effort, playing an extraordinary portion of the game's 44 minutes.

Also logging serious minutes was Russell. He displayed a veritable clinic on hustle basketball: diving to the floor, drawing a charge, and working hard in the low post against Norwell's big men. With thirteen second left in the second overtime, Russell iced two free throws to send the game into OT.

The game saw its share of trash-talking, with both the players and the fans getting in on the action. Even Cohasset's Coach Ron Ford showed more emotion than he did nearly all of last year, jumping around and suggesting a hardwood Rumplestiltskin at one point. Ford saw the game as a positive for his squad.

"I'm extremely proud of our guys. I don't think we could've played any worse than we did for three straight games leading up to this one. But we played our best game of the season so far against one of the best teams we'll play all season. I just told them to relax, go out there, and have fun, and they did that."

With the experience gained from Monday's epic battle and an emerging cast of key players, Cohasset appears poised for a mid-season run.

Grapplers do well at Panthers' tourney

By Mike Hardman
STAFF WRITER

Torin Sweeney wasn't disappointed with his team's second place finish in the Whitman-Hanson Tournament last Saturday.

Not in the least.

"We won the Marshfield Tournament," said a smiling Sweeney. "The big schools weren't going to let us do it again. Hingham has a little bit more depth.

"We're a small school and to finish second here is very impressive. I'm very pleased with the way we wrestled."

The second place finish was the Skippers best ever in the Whitman-Hanson Tournament. Cohasset ended up with 158 points, while Hingham had 172 to win the top prize.

"We had the lead, but we couldn't keep up with them," said Sweeney. "It's very difficult to do that every week."

The Skippers, though, have been on a roll this year. They had seven wrestlers in the finals. Senior Mike Baird, who is coming off an injury, was the champion at 135-pounds, while senior Luke Caldwell at 171 won his first tournament after finishing second many times.

Junior Liam O'Donnell was at 140, while senior Justin Golden, 160, finished second to Hingham's Craig Buckley at that weight class as an injury prevented him from wrestling in the finals. Senior JP Laugelle, at 275, and Hingham's Brian White hooked up in one of the most anticipated battles of the night with White winning by a pin.

Senior Ben Littauer gave Weymouth's Tom Tulley, one of the best wrestlers in the state, all he could handled at 145 pounds before losing 2-0 in one of the best finals of the night.

Mike Rossi, a senior, was second at 152.

The Skippers were able to come up with a host of fourth place finishes which powered them to second place overall.

Kevin DeVito was in action for Cohasset in the recent Marshfield Holiday Wrestling Tourney.

Freshman Peter Kovach was fourth at 112, while junior Chris Pratt fought through perhaps the toughest weight class in the tourney to end up at fourth at 119.

Junior Kevin DeVito moved up a weight class and was fourth at 189.

Junior Joe Carbone was fourth at 215, while freshman Tim Baird came up with a win at 125.

Psychologist to lead parent forum

The Carriage House Nursery School is hosting a parent forum at 7:30 p.m., Jan. 20 at the school, 23 N. Main St.

The program "The Bully, the Socialite, and the Forgotten Soul: The Importance of Children's Peer Relationships" will be presented by Joanne Benn, a development psychologist. Benn specializes in issues related to early childhood education and the family.

The workshop will examine ways that a child's peer relationships affect early development. Both biological and environmental influences on social behavior will be considered. Participants will be asked to consider questions such as, should parents worry about their children's social standing in the classroom? Do teachers need to foster peer relationships? Is it appropriate for adults to get involved in children's friendships? Which is more important: being popular or being a friend.

A donation at the door is suggested. Call 383-9785 for more information.

CHS Winter Cabaret is Jan. 20

Although this wonderful evening of Cohasset High School students' performances has been held in February in the recent past, this year you won't have to wait so long to enjoy it! The 1999 edition of the CHS music department's evening, showcasing their multi-faceted and multi-talented students, will be held at Kimball's By the Sea Hotel Wednesday, Jan. 20.

The evening will begin at 6:45 p.m. with a selection of snacks and sweets. As in the past, student-designed artwork, coordinated by art teachers Mary DeLeon and Eileen Rohrer, will be available for sale.

From 7:30 to 9 p.m., emcee and choral director Bryan Marks and band director James Mosher will present student singers, musicians and other performers in a variety of solo and ensemble performances. Advance rumors have acts ranging from a Renaissance Dance for a Quartet to reprises from the all-school production of "The Music Man." Come and warm up at the CHS Winter Cabaret!

Tickets are $8. Space is limited and reservations are necessary. Make checks payable to the Cohasset Arts Boosters and send them c/o Susan Pile, 65 Elm St. by Jan. 15. For more information, call Pile at 383-6088 or Terese D'Urso at 383-1143. Proceeds benefit music and art curriculum enrichment.

Annual chamber meeting slated

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce Annual Meeting, featuring advertising legend Stavros Cosmopulos will be held Thursday, Jan. 28, at Kimball's By-The-Sea. Hors d'oeuvres will be served from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m., followed by the dinner/meeting from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m.

Enjoy a great Kimball's dinner and valuable networking and meet the new officers and board of directors for 1999. There will be an update on village revitalization program; review the proposed harbor walkway model and a look ahead to 1999 — What are your ideas for 1999?

Tickets are $20 for members, $25 non-members. For further information, call (781) 383-1010.

The Philomela Trio in concert

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, St. Stephen's Church is presenting The Philomela Trio in a concert Sunday, Jan. 24, at 3 p.m.

The Philomela Trio is a Boston-based group consisting of Laura Sanders, soprano; Loren Pearson, violin and viola; and Lila Cleary, organ. They will perform works by Bach, Handel, Holst and Brahms. This Boston-area acclaimed trio is in residence at St. Theresa of Avila Church in West Roxbury, where they perform regularly, as well as widely concertizing in the Boston area. Their recent compact disc, "The Philomela Trio" is already a favorite among listeners, of special interest because of the combination of voice, solo strings and organ, as well as the exciting repertoire that they render.

A free-will offering will be taken.

Junior Voices and Crickets begin Jan. 20

Beginning next Wednesday, Jan. 20, Crickets and Junior Voices will again fill Wilder Hall in Hingham with the sounds of enthusiastic singing as second semester classes get underway.

Junior Voices will spend the spring term learning music in 2-3 parts from the classical and folk traditions, as well as some pieces with choralography (movements). The Broadway component will feature a medley from "Oliver!" with some solos, staging, costumes and props. The program will also stress music reading instruction, since this knowledge is useful and important for any child who plans to continue as a singing actor or chorister.

During class sessions this fall, both Junior Voices and Crickets spent time learning how to read notes and rhythms and sing new songs using solfege (do-re-mi) syllables. The singing program sponsored by The Broad Cove Chorale is directed by Margo Euler and is open to motivated and musical children in grades 1-2 (Crickets) and 3-5 (Junior Voices). Second semester will begin Wednesday, Jan. 20, at Wilder Hall, 666 Main St. in Hingham. Pre-registration for new JVs and Crickets is required; children must have a strong love of singing and be able to match pitches accurately to join the program. Call Lynn Anderson at 749-9759 for more information.

The South Shore Art Center announces ceramic artist Tina Gram has joined the faculty of the SSAC in Cohasset. Gram will be teaching two new courses starting in January. On Tuesday evenings, she will be introducing adults to the 6,000-year-old tradition of tilemaking in "Tiles: From Start to Finish." In this course, students will explore a variety of approaches and techniques based on traditional and contemporary models. Students will learn to make a press mold, in addition to designing with stamps, clay coils, slips and glazes. Issues of design, placement and methods for creating sculptural tiles — low and high relief — will also be explored. All finished work will be fired, mounted and grouted.

For young students in grades 1-3, Gram will teach "Hands in Clay," Tuesday afternoons. In this imaginative course students will learn the creative possibilities of clay. Projects will range from creating containers, such as birdhouses and animal bowls, to making small sculptures and tiles. All pieces the students make will be glazed and fired.

Gram received her Master of Fine Arts Degree in Ceramics from UMass/Dartmouth Artisanry Program.

Quincy artist at Conservatory's Staircase Gallery

"Watercolor and I have always had a special relationship," says Artist Anne Belson whose exhibit "Inspirations" is featured in South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery through the end of February.

"Inspirations" is an exhibit of small watercolor paintings from Belson's life. Belson, a South Shore Art Center artist, often chooses her subject matter when something she has seen over and over again catches her attention and holds it until she returns to the site to create the scene on paper.

She explains the importance of light in her work. She says light is always a factor in what it is about the landscape that attracts her.

Belson earned a Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Fine Arts from Emmanuel College, and a Master of Education from Boston State College. She has done graduate studies at Boston University School for the Arts and Massachusetts College of Art. She has privately studied both watercolor and portraiture.

Belson's paintings have earned accolades in a number of juried shows around New England, most recently in South Shore Art Center's Blue Ribbon Exhibition and New England Watercolor Society's juried art exhibition at the Concord Art Association.

The Staircase Gallery is free and open to the public. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Saturdays, 9 a.m. to noon. South Shore Conservatory is located at One Conservatory Drive in Hingham. For more information, call (781) 749-7565, Ext. 16.

"I had a lot of help from different people," said Justin, who credits his father's carpentry skills as the reason why he was so comfortable with the enterprise.

"We used trees that we cut down from the park and my dad got big metal bolts for putting them together," he said. "Merle Brown helped a couple of times with the work, like cutting tress and putting things together. We also needed some men to put the gates up and a new sign, which the town paid for."

"Justin was very shy when he first joined the troop," said Arthur Lehr. "He didn't want to become an Eagle along the way, but when he decided to become one, he did."

Justin watched his peers drop away from the troop over the years and concedes as he got older, scouting "kind of wasn't the popular thing so I thought about leaving sometimes, but never seriously."

Having that kind of stick-to-itiveness puts Justin in a category shared by many presidents and leaders who reached Eagle Scout status.

"The projects needed to become an Eagle Scout are so hard to do and difficult to maintain," explained Arthur Lehr. "They have to fill 30 hours of service, but it goes well over that because national headquarters in Texas wouldn't approve a simple project. Very few make it through to Eagle Scout. I'm one, my son is one and I'm hoping my grandson will be one. Most presidents have been Eagle Scouts. Many leaders in industry, too. It's quite an honor."

Typically, the scout's history is presented to a local board of review, then a national board of review and then it comes back, hopefully with an earned title of Eagle Scout. A ceremony is held and the Eagle Scout receives a letter recognizing his achievement from the president of the United States.

"They learn discipline, dependability, an ability to get along with others, to convince other people to work with them, to go out for fundraising, and to possess character," Arthur Lehr said about Eagle Scouts. "Justin meets all those qualifications."

"The best part of the project was learning leadership skills and how to work with people," he added. "I liked learning with people and getting the job done.

Aside from his scouting activities, Justin enjoys soccer, hockey, lacrosse and snowboarding. "But that's about it," he added.

He is planning to apply to Boston University and University of Maine at Farmington, and is considering a political science major.

Years from now, the cedar entranceway will remain to remind Justin of his senior year and the culmination of his time with Troop 28.

"I thought it was a lot of fun and it was good to know that I could complete a project the size of this one," he said. "It also feels good to do a community service-type thing. It was an honor to do something like that for the town and it's nice to know that when I come back when I'm older, it will still be here.

Eagle Scout candidate leaves landmarks in park

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The new cedar arches leading to Wheelwright Park mark several months of leadership, organization, planning and just plain hard work on the part of 18-year-old Cohasset High schooler Justin Maitland, who will undoubtedly earn his Eagle Scout status for spearheading the project.

The angular, cedar log arches are at the North Main Street and Forest Avenue entries to Wheelwright Park and measure 18 feet by 16 feet.

The park is an 80-acre land parcel given to the town in 1916 under the bequests of Edward Wheelwright, his wife Isaphene and brother Henry A. Wheelwright. (The Wheelwrights were descendants of one of the town's earliest families.)

The Wheelwright Park area received a $15,000 trust fund for maintenance from the Wheelwrights and vast sums were spent building walks, fireplaces and skating ponds in the park, but the park was never used much except for picnics. The original entranceways were built in the 1930s by the Works Progress Administration, a federal relief project that employed local workers from 1933 to 1941 for town projects during the Great Depression.

Justin began the two-month undertaking on August 1, after noticing that the entrances to the park were only marked on the North Main Street end with a rotting arch with a sign too battered by the elements to be read. He began plans to put up arched gateways at both entries to the park and to put new signs up on each.

He enlisted the permission and support of his troop leaders and town manager Mark Haddad for the project, which would provide the final step in his attempt to become an Eagle Scout.

"He came to me with his idea, I thought it was a great one and he went forward with it," Haddad said.

Becoming an Eagle Scout is the culmination of a boy's scouting endeavors. To qualify, a candidate must be under 18-years of age, earned 21 merit badges (awarded for activities such as first aid, camping and canoeing) and completed a 30-hours-or-more project for a town, church or city.

Justin completed his work Oct. 21, nar meeting the "under-18" requirement.

Justin began his "career" with Cohasse Troop 28 at the age of six when his family—father Kenneth, mother Heidi, and siblings Tammy and Peter—moved from Marblehead to their present home on Forest Avenue. His mother thought joining scouts would be a nice way for Justin to make new friends. (An added bonus was that she got to meet other parents, too, through monthly activities.)

Arthur Lehr, who has put in 60 years of scouting and 30 years as a scout leader, remembers the newly arrived Justin as a shy child. Lehr's son, Philip, served as Justin's troop leader.

Today, Justin is "a quiet, hardworking and very conscientious individual," said selectman Merle Brown, who worked with the future Eagle Scout on his project. "He's a real nice kid," he added.

Justin's leadership and organizational skills made possible the planning, fundraising and direction of younger scouts that brought the park entrances to fruition.

"I did most of the work on the weekends, but during the week, I did a lot of paperwork," Justin said. "I had to keep track of how many hours we worked, the supplies we used and who paid for it. The town paid for most of it, actually."

Justin directed younger scouts, ages 11 to 15, as they rebuilt a stone wall on either side of the gateway, took down the old gate and dug eight holes for the posts and railing, hauled the old cedar logs out, located park trees suitable for building material and acted as all-round gophers.

Other volunteers enlisted by Justin included Arthur and Philip Lehr and Howie Motenko.

Police drug hotline to start

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Committee wants to put the cuffs on drug use in town once and for all. To that end, the group plans to help police install an anonymous TIPS line to allow callers to report suspected drug activity without fear of further involvement.

"We welcome any help we can get so far as dealing with drugs."
— Police Chief Brian Noonan

This call-in line follows on the heels of the D&A committee's drug hotline, which provides callers with information and referrals on drug abuse and its treatment.

"We voted to give the police $360 to install a TIPS line so that people can call in and leave a tip," said committee chairman the Rev. Clifford Cutler of St. Stephen's Church. "I'm afraid this (drug situation) is something that goes on everywhere, including Cohasset."

Police statistics bear that out.

In a little over a year, there have been about 40 arrests for drug use and trafficking in Co-

Civil Service on firing line

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset has chosen fire-fighters from the state Civil Service since 1943. The town has chosen police officers from the Civil Service for an even longer period, dating back to 1928. But Selectman Merle Brown wants to end the long-standing tradition because of recent delays obtaining lists of qualified candidates from the state.

Brown proposed the elimination of Civil Service at the Jan. 13 selectmen's meeting. The fire department had to wait three months for a list of qualified candidates the last time the town needed new fire-fighters, Brown said. The fire department racked up numerous hours of overtime while it waited for the list,

Rt. 3A changes taking shape

Tenants slated for Woolworth's space

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset Consignment Shop and The Video Scene are just two of four future tenants for the former Woolworth's location in Tedeschi Plaza on Rt. 3A.

John Whalen, director of leasing with Tedeschi Realty, said the 15,000-square foot area would be divided into four spaces.

"We've wanted to open a store in the Scituate-Cohasset area for quite a while. When we heard of Woolworth's going out, we immediately jumped at the opportunity."
— Ken Driscoll of The Video Scene

"Three will have a classic retail orientation and the other more of a club activity," he said.

Whalen said Tedeschi has leased spaces to the Consignment Shop, which will relocate from Shaw's Plaza across the street, and The Video Scene, a Duxbury-based chain.

Andi Merrill, shop manager at the Consignment Shop, said plans are to start renovations March 1 with a target opening date of April 1. She said the shop's current room in Shaw's Plaza is too small.

"It's a space issue," Merrill said about the 2,400 square feet at Shaw's. "We couldn't get more space when the plaza was built." As a result, she said the shop has had to eliminate or cut down on men's and children's clothing, lingerie and maternity clothes.

Across the street at Tedeschi Plaza, Merrill will have almost 3,700 square feet to work with.

"It's just perfect for us," she said.

Ken Driscoll, owner of The Video Scene, said plans are to open the Cohasset store sometime in the spring. It will the will be his eighth store, the seventh on the South Shore.

"We've wanted to open a store in the Scituate-Cohasset area for quite a while," he said. "When we heard of Woolworth's going out, we immediately jumped at the opportunity."

South Shore ChevyGeo closing

The Chevrolet dealership on Route 3A near the Scituate line is closing to make way for a yet unnamed new use at the site.

Cohasset's Donald Staszko — who said he owns the 10-acre site that includes the dealership land, the lot occupied by Cohasset Collision and another vacant lot that once housed a restaurant — said he closed the dealership, which he bought about six years ago, because it was too demanding on him.

Staszko said the town wouldn't be disappointed with his new plans.

"I'm planning some exciting things for that piece of property that I think will benefit the community quite a bit."

The dealership will close as soon as the used cars are sold, manager Bob Travers said. He said the new cars were dispersed to other dealerships.

Staszko would not confirm rumors he was looking to construct a medical building on the site; saying only "there is nothing concrete" yet.

"There is too much rumor and innuendo in the community, why add to it?" he asked.

Intergenerational tea warms young and old

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

They sang, danced, recited poetry and played recorders. And by the time the kindergarten through grade-three moppets were through with their audience of 40 seniors attending Osgood's first intergenerational tea — one-quarter of the seniors had signed on to volunteer at the new elementary school

PSO member Kathy Yaeger's idea to develop an intergenerational program at the new Joseph Osgood Elementary School began after hearing from many seniors who wanted to give to something back to school parents who volunteered to shuttle them to local shops.

"I organize the shuttle for the seniors and found that many of them were saying to me, 'The parents are helping us out and we'd love to help them.' So I said, 'That would be great. I'd love to get you into the schools to read,'" Yaeger explained.

A call to the state Department of Education led Yaeger to investigate intergenerational programs in Sharon and Quincy, which she and fellow parent Mary Goodwin, liaison between the board of Cohasset Elder Affairs and the school program, followed as a blueprint.

From there, it didn't take much convincing to get school officials excited about the idea.

"Cohasset has such a wonderful volunteerism spirit," said Osgood Principal Marilee Cantelmo, who was so taken with Yaeger's goal that she quickly relayed the information to schools Superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey.

"When she started telling me about it, I got so excited," Cantelmo said. "It turned out that Dr. Malvey had been involved with this in other school systems. We all thought this would be a great way for the seniors to see where their tax dollars have gone to in the school and a way for them to share their rich backgrounds."

Goodwin, Yaeger and Cantelmo were joined in their planning efforts by adjustment counselor Bob LeCount and curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey, who pulled together what they hope will become an annual event.

"We're excited about the possibilities of a new partnership," said Cantelmo.

The third graders offered their potential recruits a one-on-one guided tour of the school building, treated them to refreshments supplied by PSO members Patty Hagerty, Lucia Silbati and Diane Ship, and helped them fill out questionnaires about their interests and background.

"The kids were so attentive," Yaeger said. "They were really doting on the seniors."

That's came as no surprise to Cantelmo, who pointed out that with the high rate of family transition today, many of the children don't have grandparents living nearby and a good number live in single-parent families.

"People move around now," she said. "This is not only an opportunity for the seniors to get out; it's also great for the kids."

> "Now when they come, they are smiling as they come through the door and love visiting, partly because they have older siblings who can tell them about their experience and how they had a good time."
> — Kathy Bryanton, CEA director

Newly enlisted Steve Bobo, who built many small boats over the years, plans on coming to the Osgood to share his experiences with boat-building. Organizer Yaeger hopes that a field trip into town to see some of the boats he made can be put together.

Elinor Kennedy, who taught decades ago at the old Osgood, joined in the tea with many of her old students, now seniors themselves.

Kathy Bryanton, director of Cohasset Elder Affairs, began bringing third graders in to the community center for intergenerational programs 10 years ago.

"Cohasset Elder Affairs has had a long term tradition of trying to work with the youth of Cohasset and we want to be able to have seniors volunteer in the classroom," said Bryanton..

"We would like to see more on the part of the senior community in giving of their time to the young people, sharing their experience, time and energy," she said. "Elinor Kennedy had such a wonderful time and there are many like her who have taught or have something to give to these kids and this program enables them to do that."

Just recently, Bryanton was alerted by the Cohasset Arts Lottery that the council will receive a grant to do a program on the Life and History of Abigail Adams, which will include a presentation and field trip.

That grant will be a boon to Osgood students, too, who will share enjoy a presentation about Abigail Adams and a field trip to either Abigail Adams' birthplace or that of the two Adams presidents.

"It will come down to the logistics of working out school time, senior time and museum times," said Bryanton. "But we are working on that and we hope to do this in April or May. This will be a tremendous effort on behalf of the school and Cohasset Elder Affairs to bring the schools together as an educational tool and it's the Revolutionary period of time, what women lived like and what they sacrificed for this country."

In the past, third-graders partook in an intergenerational program at the community center, where they visited and enjoyed lunch and a crafts activity with the seniors.

"One of the issues that always stood out in my mind from the very beginning when we started this is the youngsters had some fears about coming and being with seniors because they didn't have grandparents and weren't used to it," said Bryanton. "Now when they come, they are smiling as they come through the door and love visiting, partly because they have older siblings who can tell them about their experience and how they had a good time."

Pen pals have grown from such visits, Girl Scouts have returned for summer visits, nursery school students have come to sing and all involved have walked away from their contact feeling special, Bryanton explained.

"We are blessed in this community center with having children from two-months to an adult of 102 years of age," said Bryanton. "That's what is best for our society; not generation separation, but an intergenerational sharing."

King recalled through readings and song

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. was remembered at Cohasset schools with a series of readings about the 1960s slain civil rights leader's life.

School curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey initiated the tribute program "some years ago," she said, to make sure that King is recalled each year around the time of birthday, observed as a national holiday in most states since 1986.

Last week, Deer Hill students turned their thoughts to the selected readings from King's biography which a handful of fifth-graders were chosen to read over the public address system at the close of each school day.

Leading into each reading was an interlude of a song inspired by and named after King's "I Have a Dream" speech.

"We do this each year," said Fennessey. "The fifth-grade teachers are assisting and choosing the students and I think the students like doing this. They seem responsive to it."

In both Deer Hill and Osgood, the music teacher teaches the youngsters a Martin Luther King musical piece called "I Have a Dream." Each year, students' rendition of the song are tape-recorded and a short excerpt from it is played before the children's public address system reading.

"We've been recording that song for the past three years," Fennessey said.

Students have been inspired by some of the readings about the Nobel prize-winning advocate of nonviolent social change, and have stopped Fennessey in the school library or halls to say something about what they heard about King that had particularly impressed them.

Two Osgood Elementary School pupils also spoke over the public address system for their schoolmates on Tuesday.

In classrooms, teachers have been highlighting the slain theologian's life and kindergartners Fennessey visited this week spent some time sharing all they had learned with her.

"They had quite a knowledge base," she said.

King, who led the famous March on Alabama and gave the moving and often quoted "I Have a Dream" speech, would have been 70 years old this Jan. 15.

"I think all of us wanted to recognize his life since he was such a wonderful role model as a peace maker," said Fennessey. "We wanted to make sure that he children saw his birthday as a tribute and a remembrance to him."

Route 3A changes are taking shape

Driscoll said the presence of a Blockbuster video store on Route 3A at the other end of town did not deter him.

"We compete against Blockbuster in all our locations," he said. "The community is big enough that we can afford to open up and both stores should be viable." Driscoll said he expects to draw from north Marshfield, Scituate and part of Cohasset and Norwell.

Whalen of Tedeschi Realty said the video store would be 4,100 square feet.

He said there is another 2,250 feet available for a third retail store between the Consignment Shop and video store.

Whalen said he approached Radio Shack, which said no.

"But I think it's an excellent location for an electronics operator," he said.

There is an additional 2,500-sq. ft. in the rear that will be accessed by a corridor running parallel to the three retail stores. Whalen envisions its use as a possible fitness or martial arts center. He explained that the former Woolworth's was 110 feet deep, too much depth for many retailers.

He said Tedeschi Realty decided early on to divide the space.

"We considered a single use for the entire space, but there are a very small number of tenants out there who can use 15,000 sq. ft.," he said. "Subsequently, we made the decision to assemble a group of tenants. It made sense."

According to the assessor's office, the plaza that is comprised of 7.68 acres of commercially zoned land has a total value $2.65 million.

Tedeschi's Plaza has undergone many changes since its construction in 1961-62. It was originally the site of a Tedeschi's supermarket until the owner leased the store to Stop & Shop. About 12 years ago, Stop & Shop vacated the plaza for a new location on Rt. 3A and the store was subdivided to accommodate a number of stores. Woolworth's which opened in 1962 as one of the plaza's original tenants closed 18 months ago.

For the Consignment Shop, the move across the street marks the end of an era. Although, it relocated three times in the past three years within the plaza as the former Cushing Plaza was razed and rebuilt, it's been on that side of the street for 42 of its 46 years.

Shaw's spokesman Bernie Rogan said the Consignment Shop would be missed.

"It's a great business, very popular," he said.

But Rogan expects the space occupied by the Consignment Shop will be rented quickly to a retailer that will complement others in the plaza.

Rogan said Shaw's Supermarket which opened about 1-1/2 years a[illegible] is doing well.

"People are getting to know us," he said. "It takes about three years for a store to take its rightful place."

The Cohasset Shaw's is considerably smaller than the "super" stores, such as Super Stop & Shop to the north on Rt. 3A, because of available land and what could fit on the site. But Rogan said the smaller store is workable and friendly. The Cohasset store has been a prototype for two new Shaw's supermarkets recently opened in New Hampshire, he said.

Wayne Sawchuk, who is consultant to the development of land owned by Crocker Realty II, wants to build a medical building off Rt. 3A at the other end of town near Crocker Lane.

While Sawchuk hopes to have doctors "over here," he said a retail/office site for Staszko's property would be a positive use.

"I've got nothing against the car dealership," Sawchuk said. "But what Donald has done n the past has been quite positive. The timing is good to turn the site into an office/retail type of space."

Staszko said whatever he decides to do; the development will be built to the same standard of Cohasset Plaza, which he also owns.

"I will try to do it in the same manner as I did my shopping center," he said. "To that quality.

"If everything goes the way I want it to go, this will be very positive for the community and the area," Staszko said. "It will bring us a level of service we don't have now."

According to records at the assessors' office, the four acres of commercially zoned land where the car dealership sits is worth $346,500.

MBTA to hire a Greenbush community liaison

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Rep. Frank Hynes' letter to ex-secretary of transportation Patrick Moynihan in September, asking MBTA officials to work toward being a better and more responsive neighbor may pay off.

The transit authority hoping to restore commuter rail service to the area is looking to hire a senior project coordinator who will serve as a community liaison acting as a go between for the MBTA and Greenbush corridor communities. Officials up and down the proposed 17.7-mile rail line have complained repeatedly about a lack of communication on the project by T representatives.

Hynes, a longtime supporter of the proposed $285 million rail restoration, told Moynihan last fall that MBTA officials responsible for promoting the project had failed to address the many environmental and safety questions raised by residents and town officials in Scituate and throughout the rail corridor over the past year.

What he proposed to MBTA general manager Robert Prince in several letters that culminated in a December meeting is that the T find a more effective way to present and receive information about the proposed rail restoration — a project that has spanned more than 15 years.

"When the T is not listening to critics of the restoration, I think they do themselves a disfavor because they act more in a vacuum," said Hynes.

"Perhaps the future senior project coordinator the T is seeking can turn the state of miscommunication between the MBTA and Greenbush corridor communities around."

MBTA spokesman Erin Harrington said the T will begin interviewing for the position within the next few weeks.

"We'll be interviewing in the middle of February and will probably make the hire by the end of the month," she said "We're doing this to get closer to the community and see what they want. We are doing something and it's a good thing on behalf of the MBTA and the community since both will be represented."

"Hopefully, and maybe I'm a bit naive in this, there can be at least a restoration of the sense that we had back in that period of time in the late '80s and '90s that there would be a real partnership in this effort to determine the restoration of Greenbush."

State Rep. Frank Hynes,
D-Marshfield

The future senior project coordinator will be charged to assist in the planning, development and administration of the Greenbush construction project at a salary minimum of $45,000 per year, she said.

The selected candidate will work with legislators, town officials, planning boards, abutters, commuter advocacy groups and other interested parties, in addition to other duties.

But local politicians are not altogether impressed with what they say is a little effort, that's long overdue.

"Will they listen if we have this liaison?" asked state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset. "That's the question. If they haven't been hearing groups appointed to represent citizens on both sides of the issue, than will they listen to just one person?"

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund is also dubious of the plan.

"I think it's preposterous," said Hedlund. "First of all, I think it is a waste of taxpayers' money; taxpayers and toll payers subsidize two-thirds of the MBTA's budget. And unless this person has some magical powers and can impact the number of grade crossings, the impact to the communities and can figure out where to put stations in Scituate without harming our environment and wiping out a neighborhood—and I doubt that person has those abilities—than I don't think any amount of public relations, and that's what this is, can make this project more palatable."

Murray said that she read about the T liaison in the paper.

"What I read in the Mariner was that they thought a liaison would be good to have to get the message back to the T people," she said. "Now, if the T doesn't have the message yet, there is something really wrong. You're telling me that the T doesn't know the complaints of the people in my district? Does that make sense? Mediation committees have been trying to work with the T people right along."

Hynes conceded that the MBTA has paid little heed to the town committees and boards that have attempted to share citizens' concerns.

"In the last 12 to 18 months, the T has really been absent in the communities and has been making decisions not blindly, but based on discussions and conversations and meetings that were held prior to mid-1997," said Hynes. "When those decisions are determined by the MBTA, they simply then visit them on the communities on the Greenbush corridor communities as essentially a fait accompli without the community and its representative to effectively respond."

"Will they listen if we have this liaison? That's the question. If they haven't been hearing groups appointed to represent citizens on both sides of the issue, then will they listen to just one person?"

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray,
R-Cohasset

Hynes said he envisions a project coordinator who will aggressively pursue the Greenbush corridor communities' position, and bring this point of view or perception to the MBTA planners so that wherever possible, there can be mitigation and accommodation.

"Hopefully, and maybe I'm a bit naive in this, there can be at least a restoration of the sense that we had back in that period of time in the late '80s and '90s that there would be a real partnership in this effort to determine the restoration of Greenbush."

But Murray remains skeptical.

"If they want a liaison, that's fine with me," said Murray. "But those places like Kingston, Plymouth and Middleboro, if you talk to them, they were promised a lot of things by the T that they were never given, including effective barriers at crossings."

And Hedlund continues to question whether the project is worth pursuing.

"Facts are stubborn things and the project is dying of its own weight based on facts," said Hedlund. "There are just too many people in the Greenbush corridor that feel that this is not a cost effective, 21st century project that makes sense in their communities and no amount of PR changes that fact. I mean, at what point do we stop throwing bad money down a rat hole here?"

SEND THIS BOY TO FLORIDA!

Is it too much to ask? For over 34 years I work my fingers to the bone, and What do I get? (Boney Fingers?) No, seriously: While all the other big-time retailing moguls are relaxing on the sun-drenched sands of Palm Beach, Palm Springs, or Pinkski's Palm Gardens.

I'm up here slogging around, checking on bankruptcies, insurance salvage losses, closeouts, and stuff like that, trying to find the lowest prices, and the best bargains in New England!...Now isn't that worth a few days in the sun? If everybody would just buy ONE EXTRA THING: a set of sheets, a book, a pair of pants, a Dining Room Set, Then I could justify the expense of a weekend in the sun.

So how about it, New England? Help a freezing businessman get a tan: Spend more money at Building #19!

AROUND TOWN

SPECIAL BIRTHDAY

Betty Maree had a special birthday party, her 70th, held in November at the American Legion Hall. Many family and friends attended, including the Island Grove Chorus of Sweet Adelines International. They entertained for a while and then asked Betty to sit out in the audience so that they could do a special number for her! It was great fun, those ladies really know how to have a good time! South Shore Savvy, the chorus quartet, also sang and they were wonderful, too!

Betty's niece, Susan Denison, was the Master of Ceremonies and made the evening a lot of fun with her special games and prizes. Betty's grandson, Richie Wheeler, was the disc jockey and did a super job his first time out. Richie also helped to get the food heated and on the table for the sumptuous feast!

The highlight of the party for Betty was that her nephew, Richard, surprised her by coming in from Reno, Nevada, to enjoy her very special night.

These three young people are very dear to Betty's heart and to each other; together they made her birthday a memorable event, one that she will remember with fondness and love.

TORI TURNS THREE

Happy birthday to Tori ...our dear granddaughter turned three Jan. 14, the day of all the snow! There was a lot more on the day she arrived, she is our little "snow bunny." We love you!

GIRL SCOUT COOKIES

A sure sign that it's January, the Girl Scouts are selling their cookies! Oh, are they ever yummy, don't miss out! If they cannot make it to your door, surely you know one in your neighborhood! If not, just go into Carousel Antiques, Mandy will be happy to take your order (her daughter is one of the cutest Scouts we've seen in some time)!

SENIOR VOLUNTEERS

Did you know that some of our seniors help the Cohasset Water Department mail the water bills? Virginia Anderson, Pat Hanlon, Phyllis Leighton, Steve Leighton, Sara Marrno, Tillie Nardo, Olga Sawchuck, Louise Smullen and Connie Tolman. Sure helps out the water department and in so doing helps us all!

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

We want to extend Happy Birthday greetings to the following folks: Tom Cowan, Carol Dieffenbach, Mary Goodwin, James Kearney, Isabel Kelley, Ruth Pratt and Connie Tolman. All of these grand people have birthdays in January, all are special, and we hope to get complete reports on their special day! Congratulations, folks!

Richie Wheeler, Susan Denison and Richard Murray, three young people dear to Betty Maree's heart helped her celebrate her 70th birthday.

RELAY FOR LIFE

The date is set for the Third Annual Relay For Life, it will be held May 21 and 22. If you would like to join the planning committee or volunteer during the event, call Mary Shepherd at (508) 584-9600 or Victor Vanderlugt at (781) 383-6030. There will be a committee meeting Wednesday, Jan. 20, at Cohasset High School's Guidance Conference Center at 6:30 p.m. (enter in main front entrance, take a left, conference room down on right). As they say, "It's about being a community that takes up the fight ..." A cause near and dear to many of our hearts!

NOMINATION PAPERS

For all of you potential candidates, nomination papers are available at the Town Clerk's office — there are 15 positions available: moderator, town clerk, two selectman seats, three library trustee seats, one school committee, one board of health, one water commission, one sewer commission, one board of assessors, one planning board, one housing authority and one recreation commission. Something for everyone! You have a month to take out papers (Feb. 18 deadline), then you have to return them with at least 50 signatures by Feb. 22.

LEO WILL BE MISSED

Everyone was so sorry to hear of the passing of Leo Gerald McAdams, what a wonderful man he was! He adored everyone, especially his four daughters and all of his grandchildren! He was such a chef, his crabcakes and seafood dips acclaimed by all who tasted them. His smile was memorable as was everything about him — he will be missed!

NEW ENGLAND SCENE

Wasn't it great to see all of the young and old on the Common? A true New England scene, and such fun!

One of the best things about cold weather, even if you don't skate, you can enjoy watching! Now all we need is the proposed skating park complex, for the skateboarders and the in-line skaters. A super idea!

Call with news!

That's the news, hopefully your name will appear in print next time — to make it happen, give me a call!

Beef stew for Super Bowl Sunday

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

It's time to think about the "Big Sunday" — Super Bowl Sunday, of course! Aside from the game, it seems as though everyone thinks about food! This year, join in the fun by actually watching the game, instead of listening to it as you are cooking for the gang! How about a yummy beef stew?! It smells wonderful, can even be made the day before, and is easy to serve. Just one reminder: for a colorful and fresh-tasting stew, the vegetables cannot be overcooked; they may be added to most stews during the last 15-20 minutes of cooking time. One more note: don't be afraid to stray from the traditional combinations of ingredients. Creating new flavor variations is an American stew tradition in itself!

Here is a traditional stew, it serves eight people.

BEEF STEW

1 tsp. butter
2 pounds lean boneless beef, cut into 1 inch cubes
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1/2 teaspoon dried basil
1 bay leaf
1 cup water
1 12-oz can beer or ale (or an additional 1-1/2 cups water)
8 small whole onions
2 stalks celery, sliced into 2-inch pieces
4 medium carrots, cut in half crosswise
4 medium potatoes, quartered
2 medium turnips, cut into eighths
1 10-ounce package frozen peas
2 tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons chopped parsley

1. Heat butter in a 6-quart Dutch oven. Add beef cubes one half at a time; brown on all sides and remove from pan. Repeat with remaining beef cubes.

2 Return all beef cubes to Dutch oven. Add salt, pepper, bay leaf, basil, water and 1 cup beer (or water). Bring mixture to boiling. Cover, reduce heat and cook gently for 1-1/2 hours.

3. Add onions and celery; cook 30 minutes longer. Add carrots, potatoes and turnips. Stir and cook, covered, until meat and vegetables are tender — about 20 minutes.

4. Stir flour into remaining 1/2 cup beer or water. Add to stew along with peas and cook, stirring, until it is thickened. Fold in parsley. Remove bay leaf.

Along with the stew, serve a thick crusty bread and you will have a memorable meal for both the diners and the chef!

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Get into the race

It's that time again. Nomination papers for the April 10 town election are currently available at the town clerk's office. There is a myriad of seats up for grabs.

Races this year will no doubt shape up for the open seats on the school committee and board of health. School Committee chairman Rick Shea and Kevin Ulmer, chairman of the board of health, have announced they won't seek reelection.

Among other issues, the schools face the challenge of seeing major renovations completed at the middle/high school and Deer Hill School. Then there is Education Reform and the MCAS tests, which will continue to define the curriculum.

So if you have children in the schools, will have or did have — or even never had — the schools could use your perspective. The only real qualifications for service are residency and a willingness to roll up your sleeves and get down to business.

Is the environment important to you? Why not consider a run for the Cohasset Board of Health? The health board continues to tackle Title V, the state environmental code governing septic systems. A smoking ban in local restaurants, working on post-closure issues at Cohasset Heights Landfill, and the Little Harbor Study are other issues the board needs a dedicated citizen to help address.

Running for elected office must have its appeal because so many local incumbents continue to seek reelection. That says a lot for their dedication but don't let that inhibit you from seeking a seat on a particular board. New blood can be a good thing and contests between candidates are a great way to air the issues.

Is this the year you get involved?

Are you willing to work for little or no pay except the satisfaction of helping the town you call home?

Cohasset didn't get to be a great place to live without citizen participation. Over the years, this town has been blessed with people of character who worked hard to preserve what makes the town unique while at the same time moving it forward.

So even if your family has lived here for centuries or you just moved in — consider serving your town. You may find it challenging, but you won't regret it.

For more information, call the town clerk's office at 383-4100 or stop by town hall on Highland Avenue.

Scratch my back, please

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

There is much to be said for hospitals. They cure all your ills — when they don't give you something else. They repair your worn out parts — when they don't leave a sponge behind in your body.

But there is one facet of a hospital stay that has yet to be faced by the health providers..

You are lying on your back in bed, your leg and most of your body immobilized by a splint held together with Velcro. It is late in the evening. The lights, except for some dim ones in the corridor outside, are out. David Letterman has shut up shop on the TV. All is quiet.

Then it starts — the itch in the small of your back, that is, in a place where your hands don't reach.

It isn't much at first, just enough to set you wriggling around in the bed in hopes of finding a seam in the mattress to rub against that will relieve you of the torture. It doesn't work. You have to have outside help.

"Nurse," you ask the angel of mercy, the one who comes in every night and wakes you up to give you a sleeping pill, "will you scratch my back? Right there, in the middle."

She does and goes out. You think you detect a little coolness.

The itch comes back. You try to roll over in the bed to scratch against the bars that keep you from falling out of bed. It doesn't work. You have to have more outside help

Would Clara Barton have denied water to a wounded soldier on the field at Gettysburg?

"Nurse," you ask the lady in white, the one who comes in every night and wakes you up to drain a little blood from your arm — before she gives you a sleeping pill, "will you scratch my back?"

She does and goes out with the air of a woman who is telling herself, "Four years of nursing school for this?"

The itch comes back. This time there is no nurse to come to your rescue. So you push the call button.

"Yes?" comes the response.

"Can somebody come in and scratch my back?"

"In a while. We're busy now."

No one ever shows up.

A elderly woman in a red uniform pushing a broom comes back.

"Will you scratch my back?" you implore her.

"Can't," she says. "I'm housekeeping. It's not in my job description."

You push the call button again.

"Whaddya want?" comes the decidedly unnurselike response.

"Er . . . er . . . a glass of water."

This presents a dilemma for the nurse on duty. She is sure you want your back scratched but suppose you really want a glass of water? Would Clara Barton have denied water to a wounded soldier on the field at Gettysburg?

Compassion overcomes good sense so she brings the water.

"Don't you want me to scratch your back?" she asks.

"Oh, gosh, would you. You're an angel."

You expose your bare back and she takes a swipe at it and goes out. You don't see another hospital employee until it's time for breakfast. By this time you've fallen asleep and the itch has gone away by itself.

My advice to hospitals is to provide patients with back-scratchers along with towels, shaving gear and johnnies. Either that or bring one yourself.

hasset that resulted in the seizure of two ounces of cocaine, several pounds of marijuana, lab equipment, scales, motorcycles, cars, weapons, thousands of dollars in cash and a variety of drug paraphernalia. Some of those arrested lived in Cohasset.

Those figures led the police department to appoint Narcotics Officer Gregory Lennon, 26, as the town's second detective. Lennon carries on undercover investigations on town drug activity, most of which takes place at night.

Police chief Brian Noonan thinks that the TIPS line is a great idea that works well in many communities.

"We welcome any help we can get so far as dealing with drugs," he said. "To be honest with you, people do have more of an ambition to talk about it if they don't have to talk to anybody that knows them."

Noonan said that there is drug activity in Cohasset, right up to heroin, which takes up most of plain clothes' detective Lennon's time.

"The machine would be secure so that only one or two specific people could access the messages," he said. "People wouldn't want to call here and fear that someone would pass their information on to anyone. Anything called in would be in strict confidence.

Noonan expects that the line will be up sometime within a month.

The TIPS line may prove more popular than the several-months young Drug & Alcohol Hotline which has received only one call since its inception.

The hotline is manned by committee member Robert Harold, a certified drug and alcoholism counselor who works for Faxon in Quincy. Harold stresses that the service is a place where callers can receive information and referrals to help themselves or others understand and get treatment for a drug or alcohol problem.

Harold staffs the line from 6 to 10 p.m. on Tuesdays. Fliers announcing the hotline's purpose and its phone number were posted in schools. Fliers were also mailed out to social workers in neighboring towns, who called in for information about the hotline.

The hotline was started through the impetus of state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, whose phone calls wrangled a $2,000 grant from Bell Atlantic.

"Bob is still continuing to staff the hotline," Cutler said. "People are beginning to hear about it and say that they might use it."

Besides the one phone call, Harold has received some professional interest calls from social workers intrigued by the fliers. Still, he has hope left for the hotline's success.

"There has been no progress really," he said. "I'm still going to do what I have to do. I'll be there — I need is someone to call me. The reverend told me someone in his church is looking for help so I may get a call."

The committee funds are derived from projects such as a recent Christmas tree pick-up drive in the first two weekends of January, which netted $959. That money, combined with roughly $3,000 derived from an auto show last year, is already lined up for spending.

Results of student behavior survey due soon

Parents can benefit from the results of the Health Education Coordinator Michael Gill's Youth Risk Behavior Survey which is an overview of a survey on students' health behavior.

Gill said that probably sometime in the next week, he'll be sending out the results of the survey to parents, who will then be invited to get together with the Health Educational Advisory Council members in March for an open discussion.

"We'll discuss what parents, schools and communities can do to help deal with a societal issue," he said. "We've been doing this for about 20 years as kind of an ongoing thing."

The meetings for parents are held after each survey is released. "We believe that the meetings have a positive impact on health behaviors," he said.

The 10-member Health Educational Advisory Council includes local school principals, Dr. Steve Golden, Donna O'Donnell, Connie Afshar, Barbara Buckley, Joan Busk, Terese D'urso, Linda Keller, Karen Murphy, Judy Wilson, Maureen Duffy, Sue Cronin, Nancy Hertig and Carol Ciciotte.

PALS (Police Assisting Local Schools) is another boost to the school's battle against drugs.

PALS for wellness, a program designed to supplement the comprehensive health education program, is funded by grants from the Executive Office of Public Safety. The school's get $12,000 a year to provide training for teachers and police officers. It allows police officers to come in and help teachers present anti-drug lessons.

"Programs such as PALS or DARE are what schools use to try and combat drug and alcohol use," said Gill. "They are meant to be supplemental to health instruction programs which are the real meat and potatoes of any program that teaches kids about the dangers of drugs.

D&A committee handbook in the works

Some of the Drug & Alcohol Committee's funds will go toward the design, printing and distribution of a calendar-style Parents' Handbook on substance abuse. The booklet should be set for in time for release in September and the new school year, committee member Patricia Martin said.

The booklet will be white with blue and black lettering and similar in design to a handbook Martin helped develop several years ago in Montgomery, New Jersey, when she lived in that state.

"We'll follow the model of the New Jersey handbook with a gradated cover with tabs that have topics so it will be easy to access," said Martin. "We are combining that with a calendar-look with a string so it will be easy to get hold of."

A new volunteer has joined the ranks to help with the booklet. Derry Schwantner will consult on layout and graphic work for this project.

Martin said that the committee is considering bids from printers and the booklet should go to a shop sometime in August.

Safe ice advisory issued

By Jack Worley
RECREATION DIRECTOR

With the winter season upon us, residents of all ages look for outdoor areas for ice skating. Elm's Meadow, located at Cushing Road and Spring Street has been prepared by the DPW for skating, and lights, until 9:30 p.m. are also on for night skating. Elm's Meadow offers a regulated, shallow area for safe skating.

As with any outdoor skating area the ice should be tested before venturing on it. There are specific ways to test ice safety which do not include throwing debris such as rocks, sticks etc. on the ice making it hazardous for everyone.

Rather, test the ice by the edge of a skating area by carefully stepping out 6" to 8", proceeding carefully to about 2' out from the edge only if the ice appears to be safe under your weight. Chip the ice with a tool or stick until you can ascertain a rough idea as to the thickness of the ice. You should always have another person with you when doing this.

Many outdoor skating areas do not have the same thickness of ice universally over the area. Always be on guard for soft spots or thin ice which manifest from underground springs, drain pipes etc. etc. This is especially true at Elm's Meadow by the Spring Street/Cushing Road corner of the area due to drains off the hillside.

GENERAL SAFE ICE STANDARDS

Ice safe for:	0-30°	30-40°	40-50°
Single skaters:	1-3/4"	2-3/4"	6"
Couples:	2-3/4"	3-3/4"	8"
Crowds:	3-3/4"	4-3/4"	12"

Stay off of salt water ice completely.

These figures are for clear, fresh water ice only; for snow ice, add 2 inches; for water logged ice, add 3 inches; if skates cut in — go home. Salt water in mild climates is always treacherous, keep away from it. Also thickness in 40-50 degree column are safe depths for short periods of time only.

Students to help with Little Harbor study

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

It's the beginning of the end for pollution in Little Harbor. On Monday, Town Manager Mark Haddad accepted a $40,000 bid from Camp, Dresser and McKee of Cambridge to study and locate sources of bacteria that is contaminating shellfish beds in Little Harbor. One of the key aspects of the study requires CDM to utilize high school students to help with water quality testing. Health board member Steve Bobo said 40 high school students will be trained to go out in canoes and collect water samples for the study.

The study is expected to begin in April and end in October. The town had set aside $45,000 for the study, but three of the four companies that bid on the project submitted proposals that were much more expensive than the amount allocated by the town. The other companies that responded to a request for proposals (RFP) to conduct the study were Normando Associates of Plymouth, Tutela Engineering of Wilmington, and Stone Environmental of Montpelier, Vermont.

The Little Harbor study is unique because its benefits extend beyond locating pollution sources and identifying solutions. Students who participate in the study will receive valuable training from state and federal environmental agencies. Bobo said the students will receive training from the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) to utilize the Global Positioning System (GPS) , and from the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs (EOEA) to use the Massachusetts Geographic Information System (GIS). The GPS satellite system and the GIS will be used to determine the exact locations where water samples are collected. If there are too many students for the project, the sample collection area will be extended into the gulf, Bobo said.

"The teenagers will be out in canoes taking water samples. They will get the water samples, document the sources where they got the samples, and get school credit in science for their work."
— Steve Bobo

"EPA offered to provide some courses in mapping," Bobo said. "The teenagers will be out in canoes taking water samples. They will get the water samples, document the sources where they got the samples, and get school credit in science for their work."

An additional benefit to students is the chance to put their experience on a resume when applying to colleges.

"The students are very excited," Bobo said. "A lot of parents are happy about this. It's a great way to help them get their kids into a good college."

The timing of the approval of the consultant is important. Bobo said he is applying for a state grant that will pay teachers to work with the students throughout the summer, but the application has to be submitted this month. Several private and public organizations are working in unison to provide students with a rewarding experience. Bobo said representatives from the Cohasset Lobster Lab, the South Coastal Watershed Team, EPA, EOEA, and the University of Massachusetts Extension School are helping with the educational aspects of the study.

In the past, health board Chairman Kevin Ulmer said the study was necessary because of a legal agreement between the town and state environmental agencies — the Second Amended Final Judgment — which requires a wastewater management plan for areas of Cohasset without sewer service. The town responded to the agreement by creating two priority areas: one on Lily Pond and one around Little Harbor. The town will sewer homes on Lily Pond and study Little Harbor to identify pollution sources. Shellfish beds have been closed since 1983 because of pollution from an unknown source. Also, because of the pollution algae beds have grown wildly, absorbing much of the oxygen in the water necessary for healthy shellfish.

Members of the health board have pointed out that the problems with algae may all be caused by lawn fertilizer, which seeps into the water in storm runoff and other ways. If fertilizer is the source of nitrogen, the town could be forced to restrict lawn fertilizers.

According to Bobo, excess algae causes a process called utrification — the removal of oxygen from the water. The problem is further compounded by high fecal coliform levels from human waste originating at failed septic systems. Solutions may include new septic systems, sewers or decentralized waste water plants.

The RFP requires the consultant to use infrared scanners to identify the breakout of waste water from effluent sources. The infrared equipment is identical to devices used by the army in The Gulf War to locate underground land mines.

Concerns over harbor study are aired

Spending $40,000 of taxpayer money requires careful consideration. So when sewer commissioners raised some concerns over the low bidder's response to the Little Harbor study RFP, town officials paid attention. Sewer Commission Chairman Edward "Ted" Guild submitted his concerns in writing on Jan. 11. Ultimately, the low bidder, CDM, was able to address all of the sewer commission's concerns.

Guild wanted to make sure that CDM identified all discharges into Little Harbor. He also wanted verifications of the accuracy of GPS techniques, explanations on how discharges will be verified, a guarantee that CDM will use a state certified lab, and a promise to conduct a full infrared survey.

CDM responded to all of Guild's concerns in a letter dated Jan. 13. The lab CDM chose — the Center for Marine Science and Technology at the University of Massachusetts at Dartmouth — is not currently certified. CDM said the lab will obtain its certification before work begins.

One of Guild's chief concerns was that CDM proposed performing a dissolved oxygen study at high tide. Health board member Steve Bobo agreed with Guild that it would be better to perform the study under extreme conditions — during low tide before dawn at the peak of summer in August — for the most informative results. CDM agreed to discuss the matter with Brian Howes, the coordinator for UMass. Brian Haskell of CDM said the cost would remain the same whenever his company performed the study.

The sewer commissioners were also concerned that CDM's nutrient uptake study would amount to a marginal examination of possible sources of nitrogen. CDM said it would examine all potential sources. Bobo pointed out that representatives from the health board, sewer commission and selectmen unanimously approved CDM's proposal.

Water board consultant hired for Y2K inspections

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The water commission has started the long process of making sure the town's water system is not interrupted by problems related to the so-called Y2K computer bug. Software and systems analysts from Utilistar of Baton Rouge, Louisiana will inspect all of the town's water supply equipment to identify software and embedded chips that may not be Y2K compliant.

Utilistar will examine all computers, embedded chips, software, hardware, flow-meters, chemical-feed systems, alarm systems, valves, lab equipment, telephones, thermostats, and electrical systems in the water plant. The inspection, which began Jan. 12, was expected to take two days to complete. The analysts will then analyze the results to offer recommendations for systems and software that are not Y2K compliant.

The water commission has made preparations for Y2K one of its top priorities through the end of January 2000. Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said the commission will budget somewhere between $50,000 and $100,000 for Y2K compliance. McNabb has developed a thorough plan to keep the water plant functioning if the water plant stops functioning because of Y2K.

No one knows for certain what will happen at midnight, on Jan. 1, 2000. The commissioners are purchasing a new generator and a 30-day supply of fuel to run the plant in case of a massive electricity failure.

McNabb has included a back-up plan in case the plant loses power for an extended period because of failures in the nation's electrical grids. A recent article in the Boston Globe indicated that officials that oversee the nation's electricity grid are not confident that they will meet the deadline for Y2K compliance. No one knows for certain what will happen at midnight, on Jan. 1, 2000. The commissioners are purchasing a new generator and a 30-day supply of fuel to run the plant in case of a massive electricity failure.

The problem with the year 2000 for computers is that they read dates in two digits. A computer understands that 01/14/99 is actually January 14, 1999. But computers have not been prepared for the conversion from 20th century dates to 21st century dates. Computers will read 01/01/00 as January 1, 1900. That could cause all kinds of problems in everything from home PCs to the international banking system. The biggest problem with Y2K is no one knows what will happen or how long it will last if systems begin to fail. Electric utilities are getting ready, but they admit they won't be 100 percent ready by Jan. 1, 2000, McNabb said.

Correcting Y2K complications could be as simple as downloading a software patch for Windows 95 to preparing for the loss of outside utilities. Non-compliant software will have to be modified. Embedded microchips can be a problem because they have their own internal software and do their own processing. Non-compliant embedded chips will have to be replaced.

Water Commissioner Richard "Chip" Muncey opposed the Y2K plans at a Jan. 7 meeting. Muncey said he had spoken with computer networking experts who believe that there will be no problems from the Y2K bug. Muncey especially objected to an estimate from Utilistar that said the company needed to send five analysts to inspect the plant at a cost of nearly $10,000. Muncey said the Cohasset plant is small enough that two analysts should be able to inspect everything in one or two days. McNabb and Muncey discussed the preparations for almost two hours before agreeing to limit the cost of the inspections much as possible.

In other Y2K news, McNabb will give a presentation to all town department heads on Thursday, Jan. 21 about the possible effects of the Y2K bug and potential solutions.

Civil Service on the firing line

according to Brown.

Town Manager Mark Haddad is exploring the idea for selectmen. He said Civil Service is not a requirement by the state. Currently, 188 cities and towns — about half of the 351 communities in the state — use Civil Service. State law requires municipalities to eliminate Civil Service in the same way it adopted the system. In Cohasset, the town approved Civil Service for both departments with town meeting votes. Haddad said the town could eliminate Civil Service with a town meeting vote, although a special election may be required. Haddad said he will discuss the matter with Police Chief Brian Noonan and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln.

Lincoln could not be reached for comment, but Noonan said he opposed the idea. Noonan pointed out that he has never had to wait longer than two or three weeks for a list of candidates. And the candidates on the list are already pre-certified, Noonan said. Civil Service does not approve candidates who have been convicted of felonies. Applicants have passed a Civil Service exam with a minimum score. Candidates also must pass a physical agility test implemented by the Massachusetts Human Resources Division. Police officers hired under Civil Service cannot use tobacco products.

"Removing Civil Service would cause problems in the areas of hiring and promotional exams," Noonan said. "Civil Service can be a cumbersome system, but it is the best around right now. The town would have establish its own hiring procedures, including tests and promotional exams."

Noonan added that Civil Service protects officers by providing hearings before dismissals or suspensions. Officers who wish to receive promotions are require to pass Civil Service exams first. Noonan pointed out that promotional exams can be very political, and Civil Service exams help minimize that problem.

"Civil Service forces the town to have a professional police department," Noonan said.

But Brown thinks Civil Service is too outdated for Cohasset. He said Civil Service works well in cities with large police forces where politics plays a strong role.

"Civil Service started as a way to protect the men," Brown said. "Essentially, it's a union, and they offered many of the same things that a union offers. Officers couldn't be fired without a hearing and they had some job protection. But most departments have their own unions now."

Brown said Cohasset is forced to hire the first three officers on the list even if they live on the New York border and have never been to Cohasset. If a Cohasset resident was fourth on the list, Cohasset could not hire that person under Civil Service rules, Brown said.

"We can't just take anyone we want," Brown said. "If we eliminate Civil Service, we'll hire police and fire officers by advertising, just like we do with other municipal jobs. But the police and fire unions would remain. We would still require applicants to attend their academies and be certified in all areas."

Brown said Civil Service also discourages officers living in other parts of the country from relocating to Massachusetts and getting jobs with local departments. Noonan replied that many officers relocate because they are no longer wanted in their original communities.

Brown pointed out that the selectmen are just exploring their options right now. He said his biggest problem with Civil Service is paying unnecessary overtime while the town waits for a state list.

"I don't want to step on any toes or affect the men and women of our police and fire departments who are all doing great jobs," Brown said.

Ok team, everyone get in the huddle.

I've called you all here for a specific reason.

Our backs are now officially up against the wall. This is D-Day, the time where we separate the men from, well, the people that aren't men.

Time to give 110 percent and make the big time plays in the big game.

It's time to be a PTP, baby!!!! Time to go out and crunch some Flutie Flakes.

Ladies and gentlemen do not adjust your newspaper. I've not had that big breakdown people have been predicting for years or channeled the spirit of Dickie Vitale into this column

And I certainly abhor any sort of senseless violence ever undertaken on grocery products. One look at the picture on top of this column will tell you that.

I just wanted your attention, and now that I have it I'd like a little bit of your help in making 1999 "The Official Year of Getting Your Local Stuff into Your Local Newspaper."

I used the word "your" in the last paragraph for a specific reason.

Simply stated, this is your newspaper. Me, I'm just watching over it for the time being.

And since this is your local newspaper I need your help in making it as much a part of your community as it can be.

In a lot of these towns that I cover (yes, there is more than one. Six to be exact), sometimes I come across people accusing we of liking certain recreation programs or youth teams better than others because they see releases about those programs in the paper almost every week.

Nothing could be more distant from the truth. I love you all just the same. Really, I do, just like your mom and dad. I have no favorite of all my kids, but when people send write-up's into me they're going to get into the newspaper as quickly as possible no matter what strings I have to pull or hoops I need to jump through.

I make that promise to you.

Why you ask? Weren't you paying attention earlier? It's because this is your newspaper.

I'm pretty sure nobody cares about my feelings on professional wrestling (Why? I'm not sure), Pete Carroll (nice guy, but he needs to be fired) or Dan Duquette (not so nice guy, should be under the next train out of town) so I'll leave those opinions to the radio show.

At home on the slopes

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

To most people, hurtling down an icy hill at speeds faster than man was meant to travel might sound appealing for a weekend or two per year.

For Caitlin Stansell, a junior at Cohasset High School, though, skiing is a year-round activity which has put her at the top of New England's talented crop of young skiers.

After finishing first in last year's Mass Bay Ski League East Small School Division, she hopes to repeat this season.

Caitlin, "Sandy" to her friends, has skied since she was two years old and has skied competitively for the past five years, since she was in seventh grade.

For each of those five years, she has qualified for the MIAA State Championships in skiing and last year placed in the top half.

Both her brothers, 19 year-old Bobby and 12 year-old Malcolm, also ski competitively; her father coaches the high school team, and her mother has spent more than one weekend driving to the slopes of New Hampshire.

Stansell was characteristically self-deprecating when asked about her accomplishments, but came up with an impressive list when pressed.

Before she finished first in the Mass Bay League last year, she placed third the year before as only a freshman. The rankings are based on a series of six races, each with 90 participants.

She has competed in the Buddy Warner State Championships in New Hampshire and is ranked "probably high 20s" among New England skiers.

Currently, she is racing in the JII Division of the New Hampshire Alpine Racing Association (NHARA) and is excelling there as well.

This league sets its races on mountains throughout the Mount Washington Valley pits her against college skiers from universities such as Dartmouth, UNH, and Colgate.

As recently as last Monday, Stansell took first place in a Mass Bay Ski League East competition, finishing first in all divisions.

In addition to just hitting the slopes as a racer, Stansell helps her father as an assistant junior coach for the King Pine Ski Team in East Madison, N.H.

In the summer, she spends two weeks on Oregon's Mt. Hood as part of her training for the winter season.

As is evident in the list of her involvement in skiing, Stansell loves the sport.

"It's an opportunity for me to compete in something I've enjoyed since I was a child."

Business caters to the year-round athlete

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Please don't blame Bradford Norman if he's one of the few people out there who's right now watching the sky while awaiting some significant snowfall..

It's nothing personal, you see. Just business.

When you own and operate an indoor sports center, warm winters just don't pay the rent.

"I'm an indoor business, so the weather being as nice as it has this late into the year hasn't really helped me at all," said Norman, who will celebrate the second anniversary of North American Sports next month. "We like to see the snow."

N.A. Sports, located off Oak Street in the Corporate Park, near the Pembroke/Marshfield town line, is one of the few indoor sports areas on the South Shore, serving professional-level instruction in baseball, softball, soccer and basketball among other sports.

For Norman, it's a dream that sprung from the bus ride to the train ride that the Duxbury resident endured each day for more than a decade while working in middle management with the Mass General Hospital.

"They were down-sizing at the time so I spent approximately four years working on business plan for this project while riding the bus and the train into Boston," explained Norman. "I set it down for a little while, but eventually I decided and go to it and follow through on the plan."

While he's tripled the number of instructors who have time set aside at the center, business this season has not reached the pace set last year. According to Norman, that's got everything to do with the beautiful weather we've been experiencing over this year.

"Things will start to move back where they should be when the snow starts to fall and it gets too cold to practice outside. They business has been doing fine, but people coming into the center and using the batting cages and the basketball court has been slow."

The instructors at the center come from a varied background, but all bring impressive credentials to the table.

"We offer a high level of instruction," said Norman. "You are not going to find much better than what we can offer."

Duxbury resident Sandy Vance was young pitching prospect with the Los Angeles Dodgers in the early-70s before arm troubles shortened his promising career. He now spends time at the center each week teaching kids the proper way to pitch so they can avoid making the same mistakes that he did.

At the other end of the battery is Whitman native Dana Levangie, who after an impressive career at American International College has hooked on with the Boston Red Sox as their bullpen catcher after toiling in the minor leagues for several years with the organization.

Norman said that he has already had a great response from those who have worked with the former catcher in the short time he has been associated with North American Sports.

"Most kids will come in here with little or no actual professional training other than what their coach or their dad might have taught them along the way," he explained. "After just a one hour session with Dana, both the kids and the adults come out shaking their heads thinking 'Whoa, I really didn't have a clue.' Dana is a professional and has knowledge that the rest of us don't have about playing the game.

"He teaches the little stuff that the kids can take back and add to their game to make them a better player."

Keeping with baseball, San Fransisco Giants scout Glenn Tufts is available for hitting instruction.

In addition a number of baseball coaches from the South Shore are banding together to hold a Winter baseball camp during the months of February and March.

For softball, Susan Fernandez and Jen Martin are both former Division 1 players and are on staff at the center, as is Duxbury resident and former World Cup soccer player Chema Arana.

Former Brockton High and European professional basketball coach Jack Lehane handles those with a hoop fixation.

Norman said that no matter the sport, the kids coming for instruction fall into one of three categories: the younger ones who are just learning how to play the game, the average player who wants to get better and then the above-average player who wants to take his game to the next level.

"There's a little bit here for everyone," said Norman. "We see a very diversified group of kids but we take pains to make sure that everyone is treated on the same level.

"We're not here to make a kid into a professional, the pros tend to do that themselves. We're here to help the kids get to whatever the next step may be for them."

Besides the one-on-one instruction, North American Sports is also open for birthday parties as well.

Doing your part for the good of the team with host Bill Wilhelm, Ron West and myself. I can't get my mom to listen so one of you guys has got to step up to the plate and take her place. END SHAMELESS PLUG).

While there will be the occasional topical regional story in these sports pages, my pledge is to keep these pages as local as humanly possible. With myself and an ever increasing battalion of skilled freelance writer at my disposal we'll keep our thumb on the high school sports scene. Do not doubt that.

Where we need the help is covering the youth leagues and finding those great features about athletes doing something great behind the scenes or out in front of the community for all to see.

You don't have to be the second coming of Hemmingway or John Grisham to do your part, just an involved parent or coach that wants to see the kids name in the paper.

And there is only two people who want to see your child's name in the paper more than you do. That would be the kid and me.

For you traditional types, you can either call me directly at (781) 837-4577 or mail your information to David Wolcott, Community Newspaper Company, 165 Enterprise Drive, Marshfield, MA 02050.

Want to save a stamp? You can always fax material to me at (781) 837-4540 or (781) 837-4541 or you can reach me on-line at my company e-mail address, dwolcott.cnc.com.

Leave a note on my windshield.

Send a smoke signal or a carrier pigeon.

Tackle me at a local sporting event.

I don't care how you do it, just do it. Get in touch with me and help me make this the best newspaper that I can.

It's a simple equation- more community involvement = more local names and local faces in the paper and more time for the writers to do the feature stories that you are no longer going to see in the local daily newspapers and never see coming from Boston anymore.

And the sum of all the parts equals a much better local newspaper.

Now everyone, team on three and be careful out there.

ONE-TWO-THREE.... TEAM!!!!!

Three more wins for wrestlers

The Cohasset High wrestling team will be hosting the annual Cohasset Tournament on Saturday.

The matches will start at 10:30 a.m. with the finals scheduled to begin sometime between 6-6:30 p.m.

The host Skippers will be joined by Norwell, Rockland, Scituate, Middleboro, Marshfield Nauset and Duxbury.

"There should be a lot of good matches," said Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney. "We are bringing together the best wrestlers in the area."

Marshfield and the Skippers are the pre-meet favorites for the team championship.

The Skippers added three more wins this week to improve their dual meet record to 14-0.

In the 51-9 win over Hanover, the Skippers picked up wins from Chris Pratt, 119, Mike Baird, 135, Liam O'Donnell, 140, Ben Littauer, 145, Mike Rossi, 152, Justin Golden, 160, Luke Caldwell, 171, Kevin Devito, 189 and JP Laugelle, heavyweight.

The Skippers were down 16-0 in their match against Sharon before rallying for a 46-32 victory. The key for Cohasset was that they had pins in seven out of the last 10 weight classes.

The Skippers had an even tougher match against Duxbury, winning 39-38.

"They matched up well against us," said Sweeney.

Pratt, Dan Littauer, 130, Ben Littauer, Rossi, Golden, Caldwell, and Laugelle all won their bouts.

While he didn't win his match, Joe Carbone at 215 fought off a pin against a Duxbury wrestler that didn't allow the Green Dragons to get the winning point.

Her mother agrees, and adds that "she's made a lot of nice friends. It's made her more disciplined, especially to do all of that training."

Mrs. Stansell is also quick to credit Caitlin's father with playing a role in their daughter's career. He coaches both at Cohasset High School and on the King Pine squad.

When she's not jumping moguls or crossing finish lines, Caitlin plays both soccer and lacrosse at CHS and is a member of the Student Council.

In the summers, before she leaves for Mt. Hood, she treks to the Appalachia Mountain Region to volunteer in the Appalchia Service Project.

In a sport that doesn't get much press but moves at near blinding speeds, Stansell is a young star in a talented area. Her accomplishments are even more impressive when placed next to a list of her extracurricular activities. Stansell's versatility, modesty, and talent are just a few of the character traits that help her excel.

'Love Letters' benefit CHS drama scholarship fund

On Jan. 22, for one performance only, "Love Letters," which Time Magazine described as "one of the four or five best American plays of the '80s," will be presented at Cohasset High School. Two Cohasset graduates, Erin Lennon and Stewart Replogle, will perform the play under the direction of high school drama director Ron Emmons. This, the second production of the Cohasset Alumni Drama Workshop, will provide additional funding for the Cohasset Drama Scholarship Fund.

Written by A.R. Gurney, "Love Letters" is a unique and imaginative theater piece which, in the words of the author, "needs no theater, no lengthy rehearsal, no special set, no memorization of lines, and no commitment from its two actors beyond the night of performance." The piece is comprised of letters exchanged over a lifetime between two people who grew up together, went their separate ways, but continued to share confidences. As the actors read the letters aloud, what is created is an evocative, touching, frequently funny, but always telling pair of character studies in which what is implied is as revealing and meaningful as what is actually written down.

Andrew Makepeace Ladd III and Melissa Gardner, both born to wealth and position, are childhood friends whose lifelong correspondence begins with birthday party thank-you notes and summer camp postcards. Romantically attached, they continue to exchange letters through the boarding school and college years — where Andy goes on to excel at Yale and law school, while Melissa flunks out of a series of "good schools." While Andy is off at war, Melissa marries, but her attachment to Andy remains strong and she continues to keep in touch as he marries, becomes a successful attorney, gets involved in politics and, eventually, is elected to the US Senate. Meanwhile, her marriage in tatters, Melissa dabbles in art and gigolos, drinks more than she should, and becomes estranged from her children. Before the play ends, Gurney makes it eloquently clear how much the two really meant and gave to each other over the years — physically apart, perhaps, but spiritually as close as only true lovers can be. "Ladd and Gardner rise full-bodied from these pages: their joys and sufferings are palpable . . . There is a satisfying, classical feel to all this," said New York Newsday.

The newly established Cohasset Drama Scholarship will be presented each year to the graduating senior selected by his or her fellow drama workshop members as the person who has done the most to contribute to the success of Cohasset's drama program either on-stage or backstage.

A member of the Class of 1992, Erin Lennon last appeared on the Cohasset stage in "And Flights of Angels," an adaptation of Shakespeare's "Hamlet." She attended William Smith College and is employed by Old Colony Montessori School. Stewart Replogle, Class of 1977, appeared last summer in the alumni group's first production; "The Dining Room," also by Gurney. He operates Videoccasions, a video recording service, from Scituate, where he lives with his wife and two sons.

The newly established Cohasset Drama Scholarship will be presented each year to the graduating senior selected by his or her fellow drama workshop members as the person who has done the most to contribute to the success of Cohasset's drama program either on-stage or backstage. The fund was begun with last summer's student and alumni performance of "The Dining Room." A second major play combining the talents of past and present Cohasset students is planned for this July. Cohasset High School graduates interested in participating, should call Ron Emmons at the high school.

To complement the intimate nature of "Love Letters," seating will be extremely limited. Last summer's production of the alumni drama group sold out, and many people were turned away. To reserve tickets for "Love Letters," which are priced at a modest $5, call 383-2262. Friday's one-time-only performance will begin at 8 p.m. sharp, and reserved tickets will be held at the door until 7:30 p.m. It should be noted that this is an adult script that contains a few examples of language that might be considered inappropriate for children under the high school age.

Crickets and Junior Voices recently performed a mini-opera "The Christmas Jazz" as part of their holiday concert in December.

Children's singing program under way

Crickets and Junior Voices again fill Wilder Hall in Hingham with the sounds of enthusiastic singing as second-semester classes get under way.

Junior voices will spend the spring term learning music in two-three parts from the classical and folk traditions, as well as some pieces with choralography (movements). The Broadway component will feature a medley from "Oliver!" with some solos, staging, costumes and props. The program will also stress music reading instruction, since this knowledge is useful and important for any child who plans to continue as a singing actor or chorister.

During class sessions this fall, both Junior Voices and Crickets spent time learning how to read notes and rhythms and sing new songs using solfege (do-re-mi) syllables. The singing program sponsored by The Broad Cove Chorale is directed by Margo Euler and is open to motivated and musical children in grades 1-2 (Crickets) and 3-5 (Junior Voices). Second semester began Jan. 20 at Wilder Hall, 666 Main St. in Hingham. Pre-registration for new JVs and Crickets is required; children must have a strong love of singing and be able to match pitches accurately to join the program. Please call Lynn Anderson at 749-9759 for more information.

Snowstorm reminds town that winter is here

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

It's been an unusually mild winter—until last Thursday, that is, when Mother Nature made up for time lost on the South Shore.

The pelting of powdery stuff along shore area towns, ranging anywhere from eight to 16 inches in all, left many scrambling for shovels, rock salt or settling into their favorite chair with a good book.

For students, it meant a day a two-hour delay on Thursday and a day off on Friday.

"I checked with the DPW superintendent and had to make a judgment call on both days," said school superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey. "The DPW was able to clear the roads, sidewalks and driveways well enough on Thursday so that the students could get to school safely, but with the snow continuing as it did, it didn't seem that they would be able to get the paths and drives cleared in time for the children on Friday."

Storms mean sunny skies for shops such as Joseph's Hardware, where customers made the snowy drive in for the tough-weather tools they hadn't needed so far this winter. Co-manager Rick Martina said that his store was busier than expected, but no one drove off empty-handed.

"We don't like to see people having to run out for the supplies," he said, adding, "but we're happy to be able to provide them with what they need."

"It's been very unusual weather, all around."
— Bob Skilling, Mariner weather observer

The DPW prepared itself for such an emergency with a $48,000 snow removal budget for this year to be spent on sand, salt, plow blades and other necessities. Should the DPW need to spend more than budgeted, the deficit can be carried over to next year, town manager Mark Haddad explained.

"Mass. General Laws say you can make it up in the following year," he said.

Robert Skilling, a weatherman who has kept track of the weather on the South Shore for 46 years from his U.S. weather station at home in Hingham and from the Blue Hill Observatory, said that snowfall amounts varied around the coast widely, with amounts ranging between 12 inches in Hingham, 12 to 14 inches in Cohasset and amounts as much as 16 inches in Brockton.

"It's been very unusual weather, all around," he said about the snow storm followed up by balmy weather and a nighttime thunder and lightning show over the past week. "The snow began January 13, turned over to rain and a big thaw on the 15th and then was followed by an unusual lightening storm three nights ago that brought close to an inch of rain on the South Shore and two inches to Duxbury.

The efforts of the town's DPW workers, who worked from the night of Jan. 13 when the snow began and through Friday, insured the safety of Cohasseters.

Other than two small docked boats that went under water and needed rescuing by harbor master John Winters, there were no weather-related troubles reported to police.

Dispatcher David Weeks said that the coast was clear on accidents. "Everything was fine, quite fine, with no flooding or accidents" he said.

For the DPW, the biggest challenge was the length of the storm. "It just kept going, and so did we," said Carl Sestito, equipment operator. "We went home for two hours, went back out, and then went back for three more hours. I probably got five hours sleep in all."

DPW workers plowed, sanded and cleaned off the lids of catch basin covers so that melting snow could drain without flooding.

Sestito said that the snow and ice wasn't too bad, and with the schools closed, the workers had more time to tackle the storm.

"The main thing is to get the sidewalks open for school," he said. "Usually, if the schools are open, we have to make sure the sidewalks are cleaned first so the kids who are walking can make it without walking in the street."

There was some road damage reported on North Main Street, Jerusalem Road and Forest Avenue. "It was a couple of pot holes on those roads—not too bad," said Sestito. "Just scabs, really, and mostly from where the contractors remixed for the sewer and it didn't quite stick to the road."

The DPW is waiting on a new load of sand stock for their warehouse, which they like to keep full. That's 300 tons of sand and 100 tons of salt to handle the 37 miles of accepted roads and 11 miles worth of private ways.

Another dog is spray painted

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Someone is taking lack of compliance with the town's leash law a step too far. For the second time in less than a month, someone spray painted a Cohasset dog that was roaming a short distance from home.

Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy said the latest attack occurred at about 11 a.m. last Thursday.

"My feeling is someone over there does not like dogs on their property and they want to get the message across," Murphy said.

This time the victim was a male black lab named "Licorice" who was spray painted on his fore paws, head, snout and back. The incident occurred somewhere in the Black Rock beach area near Jerusalem Road and Forest Avenue.

In the previous incident, Colby, a beagle from Rust Way, came home from a brief outing the day after Christmas with his fur covered with bright, orange construction paint.

Colby got sick from ingesting some of the paint. Licorice fared somewhat better although the usually friendly dog was quite

MBTA needs strong signal

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset MBTA Mitigation Committee serves under the selectmen to protect the town's interests if the Greenbush line train returns to town. Mitigation committee Chairman Tom Gruber reminded residents at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting that the committee is officially neutral. The job of the committee is to negotiate on behalf of the selectmen.

"From their perspective, the train is coming and Cohasset be damned."

Martin Corry,
mitigation committee member

But some members of the mitigation committee are so frustrated with the MBTA's refusal to negotiate in good faith that they are urging selectmen to be more forceful with the T. Selectmen heard an update from the mitiga-

Budget numbers are an eye-opener

Worst-case scenarios are on the table

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Hold onto your wallets but keep an open mind. This is a worst-case scenario. Nothing more. The board of selectmen discussed worst-case budget scenarios at their meeting on Tuesday night just in case everything goes wrong at once. It isn't likely to happen, but you never know.

Town Manager Mark Haddad presented selectmen with three possible scenarios that presented hypothetical five-year budgets each of which could become a reality, but probably won't. Haddad presented the scenarios for various reasons. Some of the selectmen are concerned about rising school costs that the town can't afford. Also, the state has not set aside any money for local libraries since 1997. Although state officials are considering spending $160 million for libraries this year, that bill has yet to be approved by the state Legislature. In addition, there are about 22 communities already awaiting $28 million for library projects approved by the state. With dozens of other communities planning libraries, Haddad is uncertain when Cohasset could expect state funding if the library project is approved

The worst scenario examined a five-year budget projection based on a nine percent increase in the school budget every year, a $7 million override for school building upgrades, three general overrides worth about $3 million and a $2.3 million override for a new library without state funding. If such a scenario materialized, the general operating budget, including the schools, would come in at $20.15 million in fiscal year 2000 and soar to $26.19 million in fiscal year 2004. In reality, Haddad is proposing a budget this year that comes in at just under $20 million.

But the most important information concerns the impact such a scenario would have on taxpayers. If this worst case scenario actually materializes, the average tax bill — based on a $341,124 home — would increase from its current level of $5,099.80 to $5,536.44 in fiscal year 2000. The average tax bill would climb to $6,034.48 in 2001;$6,640.66 in 2002; $6,801.84 in 2003 and $7,428.65 in 2004. In this case, more than $1,000 of an average tax

Ed. Reform drives school costs

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The driving force behind much of current school cost in Cohasset is the Education Reform Act of 1993, school officials say.

"The Ed Reform Act continues to add new responsibilities to schools, administrators, curriculum standards and certainly, curriculum frameworks," said Osgood Principal Marilee Cantelmo.

Texts, staff training, and remediation for MCAS-takers that tested poorly — all Education Reform related expenditures — were the most-mentioned items on the Osgood, Deer Hill and Middle-High schools' budget request. The school department is expected to ask for a 9 percent "basic needs" budget increase in FY 2000, which begins July 1.

"I'm not going to say that these items are mandates, but it's to address our standards driven by Ed Reform," said school superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey. "On the curriculum end, it's fair to say that it's about Ed Reform."

Middle-High school Principal Curtis Collins opened his FY2000 budget review to school committee members last week by saying, "It's fair to say that the Middle-High school budget is being driven by change in public secondary education."

Trendowicz negotiations continue

Members of the board of selectmen announced at their meeting on Tuesday that they will be prepared to discuss the details of legal negotiations about the proposed expansion of Cohasset Harbor Marina, which is owned by Paul Trendowicz, in the near future. Selectman Nan Roth said the board needed to meet in privately one more time, and then they would be ready for a public unveiling of the details. Selectman Diane Sullivan apologized for the need to negotiate in secrecy. Sullivan said the selectmen had no choice because of the legal issues, and are not attempting to conceal anything from the public.

Lightkeepers memorial to be built

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the effort to create a memorial to two lighthouse keepers who died in the line of duty is nearing completion. Haddad mediated attempts by the design review board and the Governor's Island Study Committee to change the design of the memorial. Haddad finally decided to stick with the original design approved by the selectmen and sponsored by lobsterman Herbert Jason. Haddad will choose the final site for the memorial, although he has agreed to consider suggestions from the two boards.

Civil Service before town meeting

Selectmen are considering putting an article on the town meeting warrant asking voters to consider eliminating civil service in town. Selectman Merle Brown wants to eliminate civil service because the fire department had to wait three months for a list of qualified candidates recently. Brown wants to advertise for new police officers and fire fighters in newspapers and other publications. Police Chief Brian Noonan and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln oppose the elimination of civil service. Police and fire chiefs in Cohasset are not chosen from civil service lists.

Callahan wants buck-a-bag

Selectman Tom Callahan believes the board of selectmen has the authority to implement a buck-a-bag garbage disposal program without town meeting approval. And he wants to exercise that authority. Callahan said the selectmen submitted the buck-a-bag idea to town meeting last year because the agreed to put it before the voters. Town meeting voters rejected the idea. Callahan said his family of four us only about one bag a week becau they recycle so much of their garbage. Selectman Diane Sullivan opposed the idea because she felt it would be unfair to senior citizens and would discriminate against large families. But selectman Merle Brown disagreed. He said senior citizens generate less trash than large families, and would not have to purchase as many bags. He said seniors would pay less than the $65 annual fee they pay now. The selectmen plan to discuss the issue again at an upcoming meeting.

Dredging is off track

The harbor dredging project is behind schedule by at least a month despite a three-week extension of the project. That was the news delivered by selectmen at their meeting on Tuesday. Selectman Nan Roth said the delays were beyond the selectmen's control because the Army Corps of Engineers is overseeing the dredging. Roth said the delays are a result of the low bid process, and said the contractor dredging the harbor is not up to the task of completing the job in a timely manner. Selectmen Tom Callahan wanted to make sure the contractor does the work properly as well. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he is meeting with the Army Corps on Friday to discuss the situation.

Boat removal is topic

The selectmen have asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to ask the harbormaster to remove two boats stored on the grounds of the Hagerty property. Haddad said the boats belong to two residents who were too ill to remove them from the water during the dredging project, so the town did it.

Independence Building for sale

The Independence Building is officially surplus town property for sale. The selectmen have approved a plan to sell the building for no less than its assessed value of $100,000. Any sale would have to be approved by town meeting.

A meeting will be held Tuesday, Feb. 2, 6:30 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall to discuss field schedules for spring and fall activities.

PLUMBING MUSINGS
by Philip Von Iderstein M.P. #8829

THE CUR

My Uncle Jack and one of the men went on a house call to the Litz home to repair a kitchen sink. When they went to the back door a large dog attacked the glass storm door snarling and showing his teeth. Jack was always impatient and did not want to leave. So they waited for a while hoping that the owner would return and cage the cur. After a few moments Jack suggested that the helper go to the front door and knock. Then, when the brute ran to the front, Jack would rush in the back door and close the inside kitchen door. They could then work on the sink in safety and not lose an hour's pay. The helper did as he was told, and went to the front door and banged. The beast jumped up and ran down the hall pouncing on the front door. Jack ran in and slammed the inside door. "PROBLEM SOLVED." But I guess man's best friend had come up against this little tactic before. Fido ran up the front stairway along the upstairs hall and back down the kitchen stairs just in time to bite Jack in the ass. Jack ran out the back door toward the truck with the dog in hot pursuit. Then the dog spotted the helper coming around the house and he changed course and ran after him. The helper ran back into the house with the keys to the truck in his pocket. A stalemate ensued with the hound sitting on the back deck, keeping both men at bay until dark when the homeowner finally returned.

Dredging sets stage for marina expansion

Concerned citizens left out of the loop

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The controversy surrounding Cohasset Harbor Marina entered a new phase last week as dredging the area got underway setting the stage for expansion of the privately owned facility.

This was a setback for a group of neighbors and other concerned citizens who oppose the project that they contend will be an environmental and safety nightmare.

A handful of those residents sat incredulously by as the conservation commission told them last week that the marina owner was within his rights while at the same time chastising them for coming too late to the table.

"We have concerns that no one will address."
— Amory Julian, 14 Parker Ave.

"We have concerns that no one will address," project opponent Amory Julian, 14 Parker Ave., said in a telephone interview.

Those include increased traffic on Parker Avenue, safety concerns in the harbor with increased boat traffic particularly near the sailing club and Bassing Beach, and the visual impact of 30 pilings anchoring the docks in one of the most pristine areas of Cohasset Harbor.

Plans for the controversial project got rolling in July 1996 when the conservation commission held public hearings on marina owner Paul Trendowicz's plans to about double the size of the 47-slip facility.

The conservation commission, which approved the plan — that involved inter-tidal dredging on the land-ward side of the docks — said all abutters were notified at the time.

Those in attendance at last week's meeting had their hands figuratively slapped for apparently not following the public notices in the paper or responding to the certified letters sent to all abutters within 100 feet.

However some affected said this week the wording of the letter was vague and the notice appeared on July 5, when many were still on holiday.

About 18 months after getting the okay from the conservation commission, Trendowicz learned the state Department of Environmental Protection rejected the plan for environmental reasons. Realizing he couldn't expand land-ward, he went to selectmen to ask them to support moving the federal anchorage line to allow him to expand into the creek. Claiming he owned the creek bottom, Trendowicz offered to deed the land to the town in exchange for moving the anchorage line.

Trendowicz, who wants to piggyback on the town/federal $1.34 million dredging project now underway in the harbor for financial and logistical reasons, would pay to have his own area dredged.

Without moving the federal line, Trendowicz would have had to keep his existing boats and slips behind the federal anchorage area or face fines of about $25,000 a day. The area is so narrow that Trendowicz would be restricted to smaller boats making his operation not financially feasible.

Over the next eight months several well-attended, rollicking meetings were held on the matter with selectmen, the harbor committee and concerned citizens (see chronology). Finally of frustration with selectmen's lack of a decision to move the federal line, Trendowicz filed a lawsuit in land court claiming town moorings were trespassing on his property.

Selectmen and Trendowicz reached a truce in October. Selectmen agreed to withdraw a town meeting article seeking to take the creek by eminent domain and Trendowicz agreed to withdraw his lawsuit to see if the matter could be resolve amicably. Those negotiations are still underway.

So it was a surprise for many last week who learned that Trendowicz was going ahead with dredging the creek in order to expand his marina to accommodate 85 slips, 15 shy of his prior proposal.

Conservation agent Paul Shea said the public hearing on the project could not be reopened because the revised plan has less impact than the one that the commission approved in 1996.

Changes include:

- Reduced the total amount of dredge by about 2,500 cubic yards
- Reduced the amount being dredged in the inter-tidal area from 13,560 square feet to 252 square feet
- Reduced total number of boat slips from 100 to 85
- Eliminated fingers on back side (south side toward the marsh) of the expansion of the eastern portion of the marina
- Float system is pile anchored as originally proposed and approved by the conservation commission

The Army Corps of Engineers repositioned the federal lines about eight-to 10 feet with new technology allowing the marina to slide out and reduce the inter-tidal dredging needed.

Trendowicz said the expansion approved by the conservation commission has nothing to do with the federal anchorage line. However, he is still looking to add the 15 additional slips to his marina plans and is working with selectmen to resolve that issue.

"We are trying to find a solution to all problems brought up," he said.

Trendowicz told the conservation commission he was willing to meet with individual residents or as a group to discuss concerns.

"You can do more to make the project palatable for the neighbors," member Michael Dick said.

Cohasset Marina expansion chronology

July 1996 — Conservation Commission approves Cohasset Harbor Marina expansion plans with conditions. Plans involve dredging the inter-tidal area.

February 1998 — Marina owner Paul Trendowicz learns the DEP rejects his proposal to dredge the inter-tidal area on the "land-ward" side of his marina which runs his expansion plans aground.

March 1998 — Trendowicz presents a proposal to selectmen seeking to move the federal line of jurisdiction in the harbor by 40 feet so his expansion plans can move ahead and offers to deed the creek bottom to the town in exchange. Selectmen direct Town Manager Mark Haddad to work with town counsel, the harbor master and harbor committee to seek a resolution to the matter.

April 1998 — Selectmen back the harbor committee's recommendation by denying the Marina expansion plans. The denial followed assurances by the Army Corps of Engineers that support to move the federal line would not holdup the dredging project as feared. Selectmen said they share the harbor committee's concerns about loss of town moorings and worries about safety in Bailey's Creek. They ask Trendowicz to come back with his request after the harbor is dredged.

Aug. 6, 1998 — Harbor committee votes not to recommend to selectmen the Marina's revised request to move the federal line 25 feet. Committee members opt to maintain the status quo in the harbor due to safety concerns and questions about whether the town should relinquish control over the creek bottom to a private entity.

Aug. 11, 1998 — Over objections from a packed room of interested citizens, selectmen vote to send the matter to town meeting which will be asked to authorize taking the creek bottom by eminent domain. But Trendowicz cannot wait until October. He takes the issue to the next stage when he presents a letter to selectmen accusing the town of trespassing on marina land and ordering town moorings out of the park of Bailey's Creek he believes he owns.

Oct. 1998 — Selectmen agree to withdraw the special town meeting article seeking to take the creek bottom by eminent domain if Trendowicz will withdraw his lawsuit claiming town moorings are trespassing on his property. Town Manager Mark Haddad said plans are to work openly with the conservation commission, harbor committee, selectmen and Trendowicz to see if the matter can be resolved amicably over the next three months.

Jan. 1999 — With all the required permits in hand, Trendowicz starts dredging in his part of Bailey's Creek setting the stage to expand his existing operation 290 feet further to the east adding 38 slips. The conservation commission said his revised plans have less environmental impact than those the commission approved in 1996. With new technology, the Army Corps of Engineers repositions the federal line a few feet facilitating the expansion so the scaled back expansion does not encroach on the federal anchorage area after all. However, Trendowicz still wants 15 more slips and will continue to negotiate with selectmen on that issue.

Guild, Lagrotteria to step down

No races yet for open seats

STAFF WRITER

Two long-time incumbents announced this week that they would not seek reelection April 10.

Edward "Ted" Guild, who has served on the sewer commission for 16 years — more than half as chairman —has decided to call it a day.

And James Lagrotteria won't seek a fifth term on the board of assessors.

"There comes a time when you should hang up your spikes and stop," said Guild, who will be 77 in April. "I don't want to compete with Strom Thurmond."

Guild, said the sewer project which was so long in coming is now well underway.

"Things are pretty well done," he said. "If the Central Cohasset project comes in under estimates, then I'll be fulfilled."

"I don't want to compete with Strom Thurmond."
TED GUILD

Lagrotteria, who will retire soon, said he plans to travel for extended periods of time.

"Since the task of assessing requires nearly 100 percent participation at meetings and availability to taxpayers frequently, and since I will no longer be able to meet those standards, it is time to move on," he said in a letter to the board of assessors.

So far seven residents have obtained nomination papers from the town clerk's office.

Incumbents planning to seek reelection include selectmen Nan Roth and Ronnie McMorris; Town Moderator George Marlette, Town Clerk Marion Douglas, water commissioner Richard Muncey and library trustees Sheila Evans and Roger Lowe.

School committee chairman Rick Shea and health board chairman Kevin Ulmer have announced they won't seek reelection to their respective boards.

Newcomer Ann Barrett, 60 Elm St., has taken out papers for a seat on the Cohasset Housing Authority held by Betty Grassie.

The deadline for returning nomination papers with the signatures of at least 50 registered voters is Feb. 22.

timid following the incident.

"This individual does not understand the ramifications of the law and could end up in jail if caught," Murphy said.

Judy Moore, 29 Black Rock Road, saw Licorice when she went out to her car.

"I spotted him standing at a distance and thought he was a Doberman because of the reddish tinge," recalled Moore.

But when the dog got closer, Moore - who also has a Labrador retriever - realized it was a lab covered with reddish-orange paint.

Moore tried to get a grip on an unpainted section of the collar, read the tag number and reported the incident to police.

She said the dog is not one that roams the neighborhood because her property abuts the dog's owners, the Ziuggios at 554 Jerusalem Road, and she hadn't seen the dog around.

"I hope they figure out who did this," Moore said. She explained that dogs don't like the sound of aerosols, so Licorice had to have been held while he was painted.

"This individual does not understand the ramifications of the law and could end up in jail if caught."
— Paul Murphy, animal control officer

Suzanne Means, the Ziuggios' nanny, came to collect Licorice from Moore.

"He was a little timid and he's usually really rambunctious," Means said. She washed Licorice with warm soap and water. The next day, Licorice went to the dog-groomer who found paint in his ears, leading her to believe he must have been shaking his head while being painted because labs have floppy ears.

"It's pretty sad that someone would do that," she said.

Murphy, who came on board in October, plans to educate the public about the town's leash law which states a dog must be on a leash or under verbal control at all times. He urged anyone who is upset with a wandering dog to call the police at 383-1212 who will channel the calls to Murphy. He can also be reached at 383-9119. Malicious acts like spray painting dogs could get the perpetrator in trouble, he said. A conviction for cruelty to an animal can carry a $1,000 fine and a year in jail.

Permanent substitute for Deer Hill

Deer Hill School Principal Paul Callahan would like the new school budget to include an extra $14,465 to bring a permanent substitute teacher on board.

There were only 31 days last year when all 50 staff members were in attendance last year, he said.

Callahan explained to the school committee that it is difficult to find a substitute on short notice, and teachers have valid reasons to be out.

The plus of having a full-time, permanent substitute is that the teachers and staff would be familiar with the substitute, and vice versa, which would make it easier for the substitute to pick up where the absent teacher left off.

Callahan said that there were 18 days last year that he was unable to get a substitute.

Selectmen approve MediaOne cable contract

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Ask, and sometimes you receive. The selectmen signed a 10-year agreement with MediaOne that gives the town some of the perks it wanted without significant increases in pass-through costs. Cable customers will have to pay an extra 15 cents for the additional benefits. Selectman Tom Callahan voted against the agreement to protest the 15 cents pass-through charge. Better coverage of municipal government, live coverage of town meeting, access to a regional studio, an extra year of free Internet for schools and a 10 percent discount off basic cable for senior citizens are the key benefits to the town in the 10-year agreement.

The selectmen approved the 10-year non-exclusive agreement at their meeting on Tuesday. And the benefits may not end there. Although MediaOne will offer only a 10 percent discount to senior citizens and disabled veterans, the selectmen are exploring ways for the town to increase the reduction to 25 percent. One possible solution is to use a $15,000 capital fund to increase the senior discount.

Residents who want new channels like the History Channel will have to look elsewhere. Federal law does not allow towns to negotiate which channels are available. Attorney Rob Hillman represented the town, previously on the negotiating team and more recently as an attorney in the firm of Town Counsel Paul DeRensis. Hillman said federal law forces towns to extend renewal contracts to cable providers that meet four criteria: they must have complied with the terms of the previous contract, they must provide adequate service, they must show that they can run a cable company, and the new proposal must be reasonable to meet the future needs of the community.

MediaOne has agreed to provide better coverage of local meetings by adding more cameras and giving most boards the opportunity to broadcast live. The selectmen will receive two controllable cameras to improve the service currently provided by the stationary overhead unit used now. In addition, MediaOne is setting up a $5,000 fund to pay camera operators to broadcast town meeting live. MediaOne will also provide a $15,000 capital fund for new equipment purchases. However, the selectmen want to use that fund to offer a better discount to senior citizens.

MediaOne has agreed to provide better coverage of local meetings by adding more cameras and giving most boards the opportunity to broadcast live.

Selectmen Diane Sullivan said it was important to extend as many discounts to senior citizens as possible. Sullivan pointed out that some seniors are less mobile and rely on their televisions more than other residents. The cost of basic cable is only about $8, meaning seniors will save only 80 cents with the MediaOne discount. Increasing the discount to 25 percent would raise senior citizens' savings to $2 per month. Hillman said MediaOne told the town that it absolutely would not increase the senior citizen discount because hundreds of other towns would demand the same benefit.

MediaOne is planning to build a regional cable studio in one of five towns it serves: Cohasset, Scituate, Hingham, Hull or Hanover. Each town would have access to the studio. The cable company will still maintain a customer service office in Scituate.

"What we didn't do was lard up this contract with extras that would increase our monthly bills," Hillman said. "That was what mark instructed us to do. Any additional costs are pass-through costs just like you pay with any other utility."

Selectman Nan Roth wanted to know if the cable company could raise rates beyond the 15 cents pass-through. Hillman pointed out that cable rates are regulated by the federal government. If MediaOne gets permission to raise rates, there is nothing the town can do to prevent a price hike. Because the contract is non-exclusive, the town can introduce other cable providers into town to create competition.

Town prevails in James Lane lawsuit

A judge has ruled the town can make James Lane a dead-end street.

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

It's official. James Lane is now a dead-end street thanks to a decision by a Norfolk Superior Court judge. The controversy over whether a Pleasant Street resident should be allowed to use James Lane as an access road ended on Monday when the judge ruled that the town could take the land by eminent domain and block off one end of the street.

"We're very excited," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "Not only did the judge approve the action at town meeting taking the land by eminent domain, but he also told us we could install a physical barrier while we wait out the appeal process."

Haddad said he expected the DPW to block off the end of the lane with the same boulders that initiated the controversy in 1995. At that time, Edward Fitzpatrick of 68 Pleasant Street blocked the closure in court so his family could use a small strip of land to access their home.

Fitzpatrick hired attorney Charles Humphreys to fight the decision in Norfolk Superior Court. Previously, Humphreys accused the town of trying to subvert the legal process by seizing the land. In 1996, a judge ordered the town to remove the rocks after Fitzpatrick took the town to court. Although Fitzpatrick did not own the piece of land in question, he claimed historic rights dating back 100 years to use it as an access to Pleasant Street. But the judge disagreed and said the town had taken the land properly and legally.

Town meeting voters took the piece of land by eminent domain for $1 last year to block off the street and make it a dead-end. But the court placed the taking on hold until a judge decided the case.

Scott Smith of 49 James Lane has led a neighborhood effort to make James Lane a safer, dead-end street. Smith was thrilled with the decision.

> "It's fantastic. It proves the town has been right for the past five years."
> — Scott Smith, resident

"It's fantastic," Smith said. "It proves the town has been right for the past five years. The judge was really firm: he said the case had little or no chance of surviving on appeal. He said additional information plus the legal eminent domain were the real focal points for his decision."

Smith said the judge agreed with the town that public safety was the real issue and a valid reason for taking the land by eminent domain. Smith said public safety is the only reason the residents of James Lane have been fighting to make the street one-way.

Haddad said the temporary barriers will stay in place until the appeal period expires. Once that happens, the town will install a permanent barrier.

AROUND TOWN

ADORABLE TWINS

We received a lovely note from Priscilla and Ed Daniels, telling all about the family news, and here it is: Steve and Susan had adorable twins, Courtney Marie (7 lbs.) and Jarod Connell (6 lbs. 10 oz.), born Dec. 31. Their brother Connor, age 3-1/2, is delighted with "his" babies, and loves to help his mom.

Scott has designed his "dream house," which he is building overlooking the ocean, in Hull. Wife Peg's "green thumb" is anxious to plant a new garden. Alexine is becoming quite a young lady at age 12 and Eric, 3, loves to wear his "hard hat" and take his new tool box to the construction site.

Kim, her husband Jim, and "the boys," Myles (5-1/2) and Robbie (3-1/2) have moved back to the South Shore and have a home in Norwell (Jim's mom will be with them, too).

Needless to say, Priscilla and Ed are extremely happy to have their whole family nearby — isn't that wonderful?!

ACADEMIC HONORS

Noble and Greenough School Headmaster, Richard H. Baker, has announced that the following Cohasset residents have achieved academic honors for their first semester grades at Noble and Greenough School: High Distinction, Margaret Anne Goedecke (Senior), Annie E.B. Palone (Senior), and Joseph M. Palone (Sophomore). Distinction Honors were earned by Stefanie Hille Noering (Senior), Elliot Spence Noon (Junior), and Meghan Elizabeth O'Sullivan (sophomore).

Congratulations to all of you, your hard work certainly paid off!

Watch for Cohasset's Molly Hochkeppel, second from left, who plays Grace in Michael Jacobs' "Cheaters" on stage currently at the Quincy Dinner Theatre. Hochkeppel, a partner in Darling Productions, not only designed and constructed the set but is also pursuing her great love of acting in this production.

EARLY DECISION

Speaking of hard work, Margaux Yeager certainly had good news after all of her efforts throughout her high school career — she received early decision to Lynchburg College in Lynchburg, Va.! She is really excited and we know that she will do an outstanding job; but, as her neighbor, we will miss her! Her ready smile and nice personality will be missed on Red Gate Lane while she is away at College!

35TH ANNIVERSARY

Happy Anniversary wishes to Ann and Roger Pompeo, they celebrated their big 35th anniversary last week!

HI, HARRY

Spotted Harry Ritter "around town" recently; now there is a man who never seems to change! We have not seen Marge since her hip-replacement surgery, but this certainly isn't the time of year for her to venture out! Talk about being anxious for spring to arrive .

CHECKING IN WITH SENIORS

A message to seniors — did you know that Cohasset Elder Affairs has a telephone reassurance program for any senior who lives alone, is recuperating at home, or for any reason wishes a daily phone call just to "check in?" If you are interested, call the CEA office at 383-9112 and ask for Carol Barrett.

GET WELL SOON

We hope that Tom Lucas is feeling better as he reads this — one thing that is sure to help is the fact that his daughter Carla (along with her husband and baby) has moved back to Cohasset to be near him. Carla is the sort of person who would cheer up anyone considerably, and we are so happy that she is back! Welcome home!

UNDER THE WEATHER

Norm Brown, too, is "under the weather," recovering from pneumonia. Get well soon, and keep in mind that spring is coming!

CONSIGNMENT SHOP

Had a chat with Andi Merrill last week, she is in the midst of planning the new consignment shop local (how does she find the time to do all she does?) Andi hopes to have everything done by April, meanwhile she is keeping the location next to Buttonwood Books in full swing. The new shop will be in the old Woolworth's building, won't that be nice!

ON THE MEND

Greetings go to Al Sencabaugh, we hear that your recent surgery went well — we know that the follow-up treatments will go just as well for you!

'LEND ME A TENOR'

If you missed it this weekend, there is still time to get your tickets for "Lend Me a Tenor" — this is the production that the Cohasset Dramatic Club is putting on. The remaining performances will be held Jan. 29 and 30, Feb. 5 and 6 and a matinee Feb. 7. The shows all start at 8 p.m. (the matinee is at 2 p.m.), the tickets are $10 and may be purchased at Buttonwood Books or by calling 544-0040. Or, at the door. Don't miss it, the Dramatic Club always does such a wonderful job!

OPINION

Just what we need: more area codes

Just when you thought it was safe to order business cards more than 20 at a time, the state Department of Telecommunications and Energy (DTE) starts considering more area codes for Eastern Massachusetts. It makes us edgy to think that some of the same people involved in this current confusion might be involved in debugging our phone system computers to solve the Year 2000 problem.

It was only last year that 781 and 978 crowded onto the scene, but the boom in small phone companies and the formula for doling out phone exchanges mean there might be four more area codes in place by the year 2000.

The DTE was notified last spring that area codes 617, 508, 978 and 781 were running out of exchange codes - the first three digits of each seven-digit phone number. A study indicated that, at the current rate of distribution, all of the exchange codes in these four area codes could be gone as early as next January.

That does not mean the 7.5 million numbers in each area code will be given out by next January. Only that the exchange codes would be.

According to Tim Shevlin, the DTE's executive director, when a company such as Sprint, MCI or AT&T requests a group of numbers in a certain community those numbers, because of a technological limitation, are allocated in blocks of 10,000, even if the company in question has far fewer customers in that area.

The explosion in demand for extra telephone numbers is occurring to accommodate society's lust for Internet connections (thus, an additional phone line); pagers (another phone number); cellular phones (you guessed it, another number); and to service the households that pay for a second line because of a home-based business or a surplus of teenagers. This increased demand and concurrent changes in regulations on phone companies prompted a wave of companies to jump into the business, competing for the new customers.

One proposal floated early in this process would have called for new phone numbers in the new area codes to be assigned to cellular phones, modems and fax numbers. The Federal Communications Commission rejected that idea (although the decision is under appeal), saying it discriminated against wireless phone companies.

Other options include adding new area codes - either by means of an overlay or by halving each of the current area code districts and creating four more.

The so-called overlay plan would entail issuance of new area codes to anyone seeking a new number in a community. That plan would mean neighbors might have different area codes because they moved in at different times.

The splitting up of area code districts would mean some communities - even those that have already undergone a recent change - would be moved into new districts and issued new codes.

Both methods were discussed last spring at a meeting of Massachusetts industry figures, but neither was universally supported.

We think the whole issue smacks of bad planning, terrible forecasting and a basic lack of consideration for telephone customers.

But our changing habits and increased demand for service must also be held responsible for the problem.

Some thoughts regarding sailing

TO THE EDITOR:

For many good sailors, this brief set of thoughts will serve no purpose, however, there are some who have difficulty in their handling of boats under some circumstances.

One of the problems which new sailors encounter, is the process of picking up a mooring or gently coming up to a dock. The usual instructions given to pick up a mooring are to shoot up into the wind and get the mooring. This process has three possibilities, the sailor overshoots the mooring, the sailor undershoots the mooring, or he hits it just right.

An alternative method, which I propose here, is to approach the mooring in a slightly off the wind angle, and long before reaching the mooring, let all sails all the way out so that the boat will come to a stop. Then pull the main sail in and quickly release it, which will cause the boat to creep up toward the mooring quickly. This creeping up on the mooring process is very gentle and can make a very comfortable mooring process.

The same process is recommended for approaching a dock. Release the sails when coming near to a dock, and take the sail in briefly to creep in the rest of the way as needed.

This system of picking up moorings and approaching docks is very comfortable and to practice the process, try stopping at a lobsterbuoy. With practice, it will become very satisfactory.

Good luck in your sailing.

Domestic violence and the Super Bowl

TO THE EDITOR:

Historically, an increased incidence of domestic violence and Super Bowl Sunday have gone hand in hand. For whatever reason, more women than usual are seen in emergency rooms and intervention centers immediately following this day than normal.

In this case, however, the term "normal" in no way means "acceptable" as it refers to the fact that one out of every two women in the United States will be physically abused by a man sometime in her life, translating to every 15 seconds a woman being beaten in her own home.

Domestic violence is never acceptable, excusable or attributable to certain income or educational levels. It is also not expected to diminish in accounts any time soon. And so for those of us working in the field, all we can hope for is the opportunity to help one victim at a time.

At Wellspring, we offer domestic violence victims or individuals wondering whether they are being battered, an opportunity to break the cycle of pain, suffering, abuse and shame. We do this with dignity, confidentiality and compassion. We also do it free of charge.

It is our hope that not another Super Bowl Sunday will go by without someone refusing to allow the abuse and make a change. Call us at 925-3211. We are ready to help.

Eagle Scout project noted

TO THE EDITOR:

For weeks I have been driving north on Main Street and along Forest Avenue and wondered who was recreating the entrance arches to Wheelwright Park, so it was a great pleasure to read the article in the Jan. 14 Mariner about Eagle Scout candidate Justin Maitland and the many other people who were willing and able to help Justin and make it a community project.

It deserved the front page of the paper but I guess the top half of the back page isn't too bad!

Good Luck, Jason!

Lobster Lab celebrates a year of activity

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Just one year old, the Cohasset Lobster Lab has made some significant progress in its effort to provide a center for local kids to learn about scientific research in the marine environment. The following listing of events serves to indicate some of the activities the lab has been involved in.

Pre-1998

In late 1996, the town voted to adopt a project whose purpose was to establish a community and regional resource providing student research and instructional facilities, including laboratories, aquariums, computer facilities and a library, for studies of the genetics and biology of the lobster., its local marine environment and its co-inhabitants.

January — Lab established

In January, 1998, the non-profit Cohasset Lobster Lab., Inc. (CLLI) was formed, "to establish and operate a learning laboratory for marine biology and genetic research for the general public, and in particular for students of the Town of Cohasset and surrounding communities, and to repair, renovate, convert, maintain and utilize the former Cohasset Colonials showroom on Cohasset Harbor as a multi-purpose biological research and educational facility, and for the educational scientific recreational charitable, social and civic betterment of the town." (From the CLLI Articles of Organization).

April — Town turns over the building

In April, the town authorized rental of the Hagerty Cohasset Colonials Showroom to the Lab on a ten-year lease in accordance with broad guidelines authorized by the town meeting in 1997.

State Confers Tax Exempt Status

Shortly thereafter, the CLLI received its tax exempt status from the state as a charitable organization which entitles donors to claim their contributions to the Lab as tax deductions.

June — Election of Officers

In June, the first meeting of the Lobster Lab was held and a new board of directors was elected.

August — Donations, Building Stabilized

In August, a sailboat donated to the Lab was sold, and additional commitments of funding secured, thus ensuring that a matching grant from the Jane Cook foundation was eligible for funding. Meanwhile, architectural plans furnished pro bono by Keenan and Kenny, Architects, were drawn up and efforts to stabilize the building were begun.

September — Lab Begins its Work

In September, in accordance with an agreement with the high school, the first student, Tony Bramblett, a senior who has completed all his credits for college with the exception of an English course, began research on lobster genetics and marine biology using equipment and facilities at Dr. Ulmer's new company, Pavonis. Inc., sited at the Norfolk Conveyer property off Chief Justice Cushing Highway.

November — More Planning

In November, CLLI building plans were sent to all appropriate town boards, and the Design Review Board approved the plans. Various permits will be requested as appropriate.

December — Working for the Town

By December, in ongoing discussions with the high school and the town, it was agreed that students under CLLI auspices would participate in the upcoming Cohasset Little Harbor Water Quality Study by providing supplementary data to the town's contractor from samples taken of water in Little Harbor. The Lobster Lab will coordinate the work by the students with the contractor, and teachers will work with the students in collecting the samples and analyzing their results.

The Future

The lab's made a fine beginning, but they need volunteers and your support. Call any one of the Board of Directors and tell them you'd like to help.

This is one in a series of articles on the Cohasset Lobster Lab. For more information, call Steve Bobo at 383-6893.

HEALTH NOTES

Wastewater treatment options for 100 Pond St.

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

In June, 1998, the Board of health, finding that the Septic system at 100 Pond Street was performing in a satisfactory manner, and likely to do so for a long time in the future, removed the requirement to hook up to the sewer which was placed by the sewer commission (a State requirement) when the system was built.

Recently, the 100 Pond Street Association commissioned Camp Dresser & McKee to study whether the existing septic system is satisfactory and likely to continue to be so, or whether it might be cheaper to hook up to the sewer. The report indicated it might be cheaper to hook up than to spend money upgrading the system.

Since there have been numerous problems with septic systems in the area of 100 Pond Street, the Board of Health wants to see if residents would consider perhaps another option: having a town contractor operate and maintain the system. The town would have to reach an agreement with 100 Pond Street, obtain an easement, stipulating any excess treatment capacity be used by the town to service failed septic systems nearby. 100 Pond street would pay current sewer rates based on water flow.

Currently, there are over 20 septic systems in town which are considered health emergencies, and over 500 systems which are officially classed as failed. In view of the desperate need for upgraded wastewater treatment for a vast number of our town's citizens, it is appropriate to consider other wastewater treatment options when there is so little capacity for those who really need it.

Accordingly, there will be an article in the warrant at the town meeting in March to borrow money to provide for an enterprise fund to maintain and operate the 100 Pond Street system. In order for the town to take the system over:

100 Pond Street would have to vote to turn over the system to the town.

The town would have to authorize borrowing in anticipation of future revenue from the operator.

This plan is one of the first steps to cost effective control of the growing threat to pollution in the town from failed septic systems.

Health and Road Salt

You may have noticed recent publicity in the media about road deicers used in combination with sand to reduce the amount of salt placed on roads. The liquid deicer is used in combination with reduced amounts of sand and salt improve road traction during icing conditions. Any reduction in the amount of salt and sand placed on roads in the winter is helpful, because salt finds its way into our drinking water and ruins its quality. Cohasset's drinking water supply contains about 25 milligrams per liter of salt. This is a relatively high level, and it is rising. It comes mostly from winter road salt placed on route 3A by the State, although some salt comes from a cache the State keeps near Cohasset Heights landfill. The Board of Health is studying what to do about the increasing amounts of salt entering our water supply and expect to recommend a plan in time for next winter's salting season.

Cohasset Democrats to hold caucuses

Registered Democrats in Cohasset will hold a caucus Saturday, Feb. 6, at 11 a.m. to elect delegates and alternates to the 1999 Massachusetts Democratic Convention.

Cohasset Democrats will be electing four delegates and four alternates equally divided between men and women to represent their ward or town at the 1999 Convention. The apportioned number of delegates has been allotted based upon a formula giving equal weight to Democratic Party registrants and the average vote for Democratic candidates in the last general elections for Governor and President as published in the Massachusetts Elections Statistics Public Documents for 1996 and 1998.

Caucus Chair Agnes McCann will call the caucus at 11 a.m. at Cohasset Town Hall.

The caucus is open to all registered Democrats, those ineligible to register, and media representatives. Only those Democrats registered to vote in the town or ward are eligible to participate and vote in this caucus. There is no proxy or absentee voting. Candidates for delegate/alternate must give their permission in writing and be nominated. All candidates may make a two minute statement and may distribute materials on their behalf. All ballots are written and secret. Those candidates receiving the greatest number of votes on the first ballot shall be elected. Slate making is allowed, but no special preference will be allowed. There is no quorum requirement and no admission fee or charge at the caucus, although donations may be solicited by the ward or town committee.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity, or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited. Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed at the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 129 Portland St., Boston, MA 02114 no later than 10 days after caucus date.

Town Census for 1999

The Town Census for 1999 has been mailed to each household. The local census is primarily used to maintain voting and jury lists but it also aids in school enrollment projections, public safety and senior citizens' needs. The local census also establishes proof of residency, which is often needed for certain privileges, such as transfer station stickers and cemetery rights, certain veterans' benefits, and reduced tuition rates at state colleges and universities..

Dog forms were enclosed. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31, 1999. Forms need to be returned as soon as possible. If you did not receive one, call the Town Clerk's office.

Choosing an inoffensive nickname

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Some folks in Tennessee are protesting the choice of the nickname "Titans" for the new Nashville franchise in the NFL. It's racist. Seems members of the Ku Klux Klan used to call their leaders "Grand Titans," 130 years ago.

"Come in, coach. Sit down. I suppose you're wondering why I wanted to see you."

"Yes. It isn't every day the school superintendent summons the football coach to his office. What's up?"

"It's the school nickname."

"Indians? Our football team has been the Indians for as long as I can remember. What's wrong with it?"

"I got one. This is the place where the American revolution started. So let's call ourselves the Minutemen. No one, except maybe a couple of Brits, can object to that."

"There have been some complaints that it's demeaning to Native Americans. We have to have a new nickname."

"That's easily done. How about Redskins."

"Don't be funny. That's even worse. Any reference to Indians is not to be tolerated, and that includes Chiefs, Warriors and even Braves, even though Jane Fonda herself does the tomahawk chop for her husband's team in Atlanta."

"Well, let me see, now, there's a lot of Irish kids on the team. Why don't we call ourselves the Fighting Irish?"

"I checked with the Irish consulate. That's a stereotype. You know, the Irish get drunk before they get to fighting. Or so everybody thinks."

"I got one. This is the place where the American revolution started. So let's call ourselves the Minutemen. No one, except maybe a couple of Brits, can object to that."

"I checked that, too. There's a small but highly vocal group ready to protest that because the Minuteman is a symbol of oppression and sexism since he is a man and carries a rifle."

"I got it. What say we call the team the Blue Devils. Certainly old Lucifer himself wouldn't protest."

"No he wouldn't. But the Christian Coalition would.. I checked. And that goes for Red Devils, too. We'd have the Christian Coalition and the Native Americans both after us for that one."

"Gee, this is a tough one. I guess we'll have to fall back on animals. We can be the Tigers or the Wildcats or the Lions, you know, something like that. Let's see anyone object to those names."

"Don't be too sure. There's always PETA."

"PETA?"

"Yes, People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals."

"What's unethical about using an animal nickname for our football team?"

"Plenty, according to the PETA people, our use of animal nicknames might damage their self-esteem. Suppose we called ourselves the tigers and had a tiger mascot. How do you think he would feel?"

"What does PETA think of beavers?"

"Wash your mouth out!"

"I guess animals are out. What can we call ourselves that wouldn't offend someone? . . . Wait . . . I've got it! Let's become the 'Bltfskes.'"

"What does it mean?"

"Nothing. That's the beauty of it. It doesn't mean anything. It's a word that can't offend anyone."

bill in 2002 and 2004 would go toward paying off overrides. The amount of money the town pays toward its debts would have to increase from $658,015 in 2000 to more than $1.5 million in 2001 and nearly $1.8 million in 2002.

Haddad's worst-case figures are predicated on the assumption that the town approves a $845,642 general override at the spring town meeting to cover shortfalls and a nine percent increase in the school budget. If the school budget increases by nine percent per year, taxpayers will spend $8.92 million for education in fiscal year 2000; $9.73 million in 2001; $10.61 million in 2002;$11.56 million in 2003 and $12.60 million in 2004.

Haddad prepared two other scenarios, both less expensive. A second scenario estimated the impact on the budget of only a nine percent per year increase in the school budget and three general overrides worth around $3 million. Under this scenario, the average tax bill would increase from $5,536.44 in fiscal year 2000 to a peak of $7,102 in 2004.

The third scenario assessed the impact of a six percent increase in the school budget, two general overrides worth about $1.35 million and a $2.3 million override for the library without state funding. Under this scenario, the average tax bill would increase from $5,485.27 in fiscal year 2000 to $6,780 in 2004.

"This is pretty horrifying," said selectman Diane Sullivan.

The selectmen focused much of their attention on the rising cost of public education. Some of the selectmen complained that the school operating budget is inaccurate because the municipal budget pays for teachers' health care benefits. Haddad said an analysis shows that the 63.5 percent of the town's health care and benefits budget pays for school employees.

"I would like to have a look at their approved budget and then ask them to be here. We have to talk to them face to face in front of the TV."

— Selectman Tom Callahan

"I would like to put these costs and any other costs accrued into the school budget so they are responsible in their budget," said selectman Nan Roth. "When they hire a teacher, they should be responsible for their benefits."

Selectman Tom Callahan said when health care and other benefits are factored in, the school budget actually accounts for about 57 percent of the town's overall budget.

"I would like to have a look at their approved budget and then ask them to be here," Callahan said. "We have to talk to them face to face in front of the TV."

The selectmen felt that the town cannot afford a nine percent increase in the school budget this year or any other year. This year, Haddad's overall projected town budget includes a 2.78 percent increase in the municipal budget and a six percent increase in the school budget.

Haddad also informed selectmen that the town's $130,000 legal budget will be exhausted well before the end of the fiscal year. Negotiations between the town and owners of the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill have cost the town $70,000 so far. The negotiations are continuing and site assignment hearings have been delayed until March 15. Haddad said much of the expense is because of e-mails from members of the CHL sub-committee to Town Counsel Paul DeRensis. Haddad said DeRensis must answer each e-mail which raises the town's costs tremendously.

Callahan said the e-mail was necessary because members of the negotiating teams can't always meet face to face, but need to discuss strategies and solutions. However, he agreed that the cost was too high and something should be done. He also complained that no one is in charge of monitoring DeRensis' billing procedures. Roth suggested appointing one person to discuss negotiations with committee members and then be the only person authorized to send e-mail to DeRensis.

Haddad said the selectmen will have to consider adding funds to the town's legal budget.

Selectmen will take the budget up again at their meeting next week.

HELP FOR HEADACHES

There is a logical connection between the spine, which functions as a pathway to the brain, and headaches. For instance, cradling a telephone receiver on the shoulder for prolonged periods may alter blood circulation and disrupt proper nerve function to cause headaches. By looking at the system in its total context, chiropractors may be able to treat headaches in a very effective manner. In a study published in the Journal of Manipulation and Physiology Therapy that compared patients who had undergone six weeks of spinal manipulation with others who had been treated with amitripyline (an antidepressant commonly prescribed to control severe headache pain) for the same time period, the chiropractic patients experienced about 30% less pain than the medicated patients.

If you're suffering from headaches, neck, arm, leg, or back pain, maybe it's time for you to give chiropractic healthcare a try. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we're currently accepting new patients and would be pleased if you called 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. We look at your overall health - focusing not only on your spine, but also on your lifestyle. This integrated approach helps determine the most effective care for you. Let us help you. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor. Our "Mothers Morning Out" program can help you give your children self-confidence and self-trust. Call us to find out more.

P.S. - Although statistics are not readily available, the American Chiropractic Association reports that the number of chiropractic visits for headaches has increased appreciably in recent years.

Ed. Reform is driving school costs

Collins cited the Education Reform Act as propelling the supply issues, professional development needs and remediation for MCAS that is needed to keep up with state standards in education.

"It's certainly had an impact," he said.

As schools revise their curriculum and standards to meet state guidelines, tests such as the MCAS are supposed to assess how the schools are doing in meeting the new curriculum. Second- and third-graders will be joining in mandatory testing, too, besides the fourth-, eight- and 10th-grade students who take the MCAS.

At this time, the school committee has proposed a basic budget and an educational needs budget.

"They are really worlds apart," said Malvey. "The educational needs budget is really a very honest and open look at the school district and we've tried to identify areas that we felt we could improve upon both from a curriculum standpoint as well as an organizational standpoint and some of that requires new materials, personnel and programs. The basic budget is kind of if we're to stay in existence as we are currently and trying to absorb the increases from one year to the next."

Malvey is also working on the educational needs budget — that involves a 23 percent increase over this year's budget — with the school committee, though he admits that it may be difficult to get that amount.

"We are using that as our starting point and we may end up with more like the basic budget," he said. "Some have called the educational needs budget a 'wish list,' but from my perspective, we need to take an honest look at the conditions of the Cohasset schools and a lot of educational and personnel areas."

The anticipated 9 percent that the committee will settle on fits their basic budget.

"This still is a working document," said Malvey.

The school committee will hold a public meeting at 7:30 p.m., Jan. 28 in the high school AV room.

Officials gather for informal budget powwow

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Town manager Mark Haddad's suggested raise of 6 percent for schools doesn't meet the 9 percent that school committee members say they will probably need to keep within a bare-bones budget.

"Six percent may not cut it for you but then we need to get that out to the town," said Haddad to school committee members who met with selectmen and advisory committee members in an informal but public meeting last week.

School committee chairman Rick Shea outlined costs generated from a $390,000 contract with teachers; a $137,000 SPED increase; two leased buses for $16,000; $35,000 in utility costs for the new Osgood; an additional teacher at Deer Hill hired at $38,000, which came to $616,000.

Shea pointed out that any money needed to smooth out the new Osgood elementary school's kinks will be eligible for 60 percent reimbursement so long as the building is not declared a finished project at this time. That would mean that the anticipated redesign of the Deer Hill and new Joseph Osgood Elementary School's driveway and parking lot, as well as other unanticipated building expenses, can be fixed with less cost to the local taxpayer.

"We can make it separate for school and town, but we should be together or we'll split the town."
— Selectman Merle Brown, on the override

"The school has a one-year window on requests to the state," explained school superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey.

Selectman Nan Roth said that the school committee and selectmen should weigh the override in terms of present versus later needs. "We don't want to kill off the possibility of an override in the future," she said.

School committee members mentioned SPED costs, new students, technology needs, changes in curriculum due to the Education Reform Act of 1993 and unexpected costs at the new Osgood as only some of the factors that would be incorporated in their final submitted budget request.

School committee member Joseph McElroy reminded those present that some of the diversity of the town could be lost with the increased load on tax payers to support the schools.

The question of alternative funding to reduce tax-payer burden was raised, with advisory committee member Dick Avery asking town manager Mark Haddad about other sources of money for the town.

"One of the reasons for getting a town manager was to go beyond the tax levy base for funds," he said.

Roth pointed out that most grants have income requirements or are financially based, which Cohasset doesn't qualify for because of its affluent status. In addition, grants are usually project-based.

Adding to the town's financial woes is that the town's free cash was used last year, Haddad explained.

As numbers continued to be bandied about, Roth said, "I think we need not a specific number, but we need to present what is needed and if it doesn't pass, we go down."

If the school committee "goes down," selectmen will, too, because they decided to present one override at town meeting, rather than a separate one for the school and town.

"We can make it separate for school and town, but we should be together or we'll split the town," said selectman Merle Brown. "We all go down together or we'll be running each other over with our automobiles."

SPED budget in need of state relief

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Special education director for Cohasset schools Lynn Silva told school committee members that an overall 23 percent budget increase will be needed for her to keep up with state-mandated IEPs (individual education plans). That's $555,000 for the program year round, or an average $25,000 per SPED student.

"We are responsible for children ages three to 22, whereas you are responsible at grade K," said Silva.

The Department of Health runs early intervention programs to provide services from birth to age three years if they are identified for those services and provided that at 2-1/2 years of age the town is told what services they currently receive and what they should continue to get.

"That's the place where we pick up and we need an IEP in place," said Silva.

Many of the children come with a diagnosis set. Sometimes, the parents refer the child for testing, in which case the school department has a legal obligation to do an outreach for that student.

"We do a screening to see if an evaluation is required," said Silva." We pick up these students as we go along."

Early intervention has been emphasized for SPED children because brain research shows that the window of opportunity is occurring at those early stages, Silva explained.

The growing number of SPED students is partly due to modern technology which allows very premature babies to survive, but may leave many with a myriad of special needs.

School committee member Joseph McElroy predicted last week that if current trends of the school and SPED budgets continue, by the year 2012 the SPED budget will outweigh the "whole school budget combined.

"We've looked at past SPED projects with rose colored glasses," he said.

"I think Joe was working on the figures about what would happen if things continued to go at this rate," said school superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey in a phone interview this week. "But this is not an issue of students rights and the obligation of a school district to meet that. We fully respect that. It's the funding mechanism from the state. Always has been and will be in the future."

Malvey explained that local resources continue to be called upon to fund the local SPED requirements.

"Joe's point was, will we have sufficient funds for rest of the students," said Malvey. "We're trying to put out a call to the state for assistance. We can do a very good job at this and have been, but we need the funding."

Media and kids not a good mix, Malvey warns

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

School superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey suggested that the school committee study material from a state-wide superintendents' conference he attended where the influence of media and technology on children was discussed.

Dr. David Walsh, president of the National Institute on Media and the Family in Minneapolis, spoke at the conference which Malvey attended, and discussed the powerful influence that television has on children.

Walsh explained that American children spend more time watching television than any other spare-time activity; school age children spend 56 times greater time watching TV than interacting with their fathers, and 11 times more time with the TV than with their mothers; 75 percent of the prime time shows have some sexual content; the average American child will have seen some 200,000 acts of violence on TV before graduating high school; and avid readers watched TV least while non-readers watched it most.

While Walsh concedes that there are good educational shows available on television, he also quoted the former Chairman of the FCC, Nicholas Johnson, who said, "All television is educational. The question is, what does it teach?"

Some of the tips Walsh offers parents to help supervise their children's TV viewing time are: avoid using the TV as a babysitter; know what your child is watching and discuss it with him or her; keep the television out of your children's bedrooms; set guidelines on when and what children watch; decide in advance what the family can watch together, and maybe use the VCR to schedule a movie or favorite show; and enjoy your family meals without the TV.

"The concept is that children are barraged by media and video games," said Malvey. "That, combined with the changing structure of family, attitudes and values, one-parent homes; the connection with parents and adults diminishes and the media takes over."

An anecdotal example given at the conference is a toddler playing with blocks until he spots the TV, at which point the child leaves the blocks behind and focuses only on the television.

"Forget about exploration," said Malvey, adding, "Instead, they pick up violence and other vices modeled on these TV shows. As educators, we need to be aware about the way our children interact with media."

Cohasset needs to send MBTA "strong signal"

tion committee that effectively said the MBTA is not mitigating the effects the train will have on the town. Also, state environmental officials haven't even responded to correspondence from the selectmen complaining about the MBTA's lack of sincerity in mitigation negotiations.

Members of the mitigation committee and other town officials met with representatives from Hingham and Scituate in Hingham Town Hall Wednesday night after The Mariner went to press. The selectmen are also considering a proposal to put two non-binding questions on an election ballot asking voters whether they support the train and if they agree with the way it is being funded. The MBTA has refused federal funds for the project, an effort that some opponents of the train see as a tactic to avoid federal restrictions on trains in Hingham' historic district.

The tri-town meeting was a continuation of ongoing discussions among the three towns to find common areas in negotiations with the MBTA. Some officials believe the three towns can be more effective in negotiations if they band together.

"In my 1-1/2 years on the mitigation committee, the T hasn't done much," Gruber told selectmen. "They reneged on James Brook, and they semi-reneged on the Sohier Street wells. As we try to acquire the necessary protections for Cohasset, we have been faced with a lack of coherence and integrity from the MBTA. We are stalled on issues about noise, pollution, vibration, private ways, grade crossings and tracking documents."

Gruber asked selectmen for a directive on how to proceed, which sparked off an angry exchange among some of the selectmen. Selectman Diane Sullivan was annoyed that the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs failed to respond to a letter sent by the selectmen several months ago complaining about the MBTA. Selectman Nan Roth suggested sending another letter to see if the state would respond. Sullivan agreed that the selectmen should be more vigorous. She suggested regrouping after the three towns meet on Wednesday.

Mitigation committee member Marty Corry said the problem is that the MBTA doesn't really want to negotiate mitigation issues with any of the town's that are part of Greenbush.

"They're talking us to death," Corry said. "From their perspective, the train is coming and Cohasset be damned. Honestly, nothing has been accomplished and my intuition tells me that we'll see a final environmental impact report this summer and our chance could pass us by."

Corry suggested hiring an environmental firm to examine the potential effects of the train and refute the MBTA's claim that it will have minimal impacts on the towns. He added that the town should consider pursuing mitigation in court if that becomes necessary.

"The next step is to ask ourselves how to begin the next stage and not go on with this sham anymore so we can protect the citizens of Cohasset," Corry said.

Callahan said the problem is that the town is being perceived as pro-train by the MBTA.

"I don't see the point in sending more wishy-washy letter to state agencies that won't even answer," Callahan said. "The problem is we've been wishy-washy in our decision making. The issue of the merits of the train is almost a side issue. The issue is the T's failure to address all the EIR issues as required by the MEPA process."

Callahan accused Sullivan and selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris —who did not attend Tuesday's meeting— of undercutting the town's position by refusing to sign a letter to the state from Scituate, Cohasset and Hingham challenging the T's behavior. In addition to mitigation issues, the letter urged state officials to force the T to consider alternatives to the train.

"I want this board to direct the mitigation committee to be more forceful and stop writing wishy-washy letters," Callahan said. "These gentlemen on the committee have suggested litigation and I think we should be ready to enforce that."

Mitigation committee member Michael Dick urged the selectmen to forge better relationships with Hingham and Scituate.

"Scituate has problems with the location of the stations, Hingham has problems with the train going through their historic district and we have problems with the damage the train will cause to our precious wetlands," Dick said. "Our common ground is that we're not getting the proper mitigation for our towns from the MBTA. We will all bear a terrible cost if the train is built as planned."

Matmen stay at the head of the class

By Bob Buckley
CORRESPONDENT

One is the loneliest number you'll ever know but in sports it is not the saddest experience you'll ever know.

Being number one is the pinnacle of performance; there is a feeling there is no one better. But with that exhalted status comes responsibility.

The number one seeds at the eighth annual Cohasset Invitational Wrestling Tournament know that feeling and know the responsibility. It is something they all took very seriously.

"I'm here to take care of business," said Duxbury's Mark Kerrigan who was the number seed in the 140 pound weight class. "I'm just here to do my best and if I do my best I've done all I can. I can't control anything else."

All of the number one seeds at the Cohasset Invitational on Saturday night followed Kerrigan's advice. Each number one seed in each of the weight classes came away victorious in their respective classes.

Teamwise, Cohasset, rated number four in Massachusetts in one Boston paper and number nine in New England had the most number one seeds and therefore came away with the team championship.

The host finished with 239.5 points to pull away from Marshfield who was second with 194. Norwell was a very respectable third with 105 points followed by Nauset, Rockland, Scituate, Middleboro and Duxbury.

The Skippers have been on a near decade long roll as Cohasset has moved from an average program to a South Shore power to now a state power. Eight different Skippers were crowned champions in their respective weight classes on Saturday night as Cohasset was clearly the class of a very talented field.

"We have six seniors here with four years of experience so they know the routine," said Cohasset coach Torrin Sweeney "The younger kids are just feeding off of that. Good wrestling is contagious and we have been a good program since 1990. We have built this program so now we are being recognized (outside of the South Shore) andthat is a good feeling."

But just as the number one seed felt the pressure of being the top cat; so too the Skippers must deal with that burden. Cohasset is no longer the pleasant surprise, expectations surround the program. Sweeney feels his team is ready for that challenge.

"What we are trying to do is turn that pressure into a positive," said Sweeney. "It is a huge motivational tool for us so instead of being afraid of being (one of the top teams in the state), we are thriving on it."

Cohasset enjoyed success throughout the weight classifications as Craig Sheerin got the Skippers into the win column with a victory at 112 pounds.

Sheerin beat Kyle Giacomozzi of Scituate in the championship. Mike Baird was impressive at 135 pounds as he beat Marshfield's Sean O'Brien. The Skippers then went on a role in the mid weight classes as Mike Rossi at 152 pounds, Justin Golden at 160 and Luke Caldwell all came away with victories.

Golden faced the most difficult challenge of the three in his final as edged Ben Wilcox of Marshfield 3-2. J.P Laugelle ended Cohasset's night of domination with a victory over Marshfield's Bill Huling.

'Skips' trip Hull

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset has discovered the secret to success when it comes to high school athletics.

When in doubt, schedule a game against Hull.

It worked for the field hockey team late this season when they got the better of the Pirates for the first time in a decade.

The losing streak was up to 15 years for the football team against Hull, but they took care of that problem with an exciting win on Thanksgiving morning.

Even the soccer program found some success against Hull this season.

Senior gunner Jaime DeMichele hit a long shot with time running out to put the Skippers over the top last week.

Now you can add the girls basketball team to the list as they battled to an exciting win last week in overtime against Hull.

Although it was only there first win of the season, an invitation to the post-season MIAA tourney is not as far off as one might think for the small, but game, basketball team.

Although they are a Division 4 squad, Cohasset is a member of the South Shore League and for the most part plays a Division 3 schedule. To make it into the tourney, Cohasset would have to win 50 percent of their Division 4 games.

Those inter-division games on the schedule this season are a home-and-home series against Hull and then one against Avon. They lost to Avon earlier this season in the Converse Christmas Tourney but have their final chance to qualify on Feb. 5 when they face Hull at home.

Coming off the glow of the win over the Pirates, Cohasset wasn't as lucky on Friday afternoon when they fell to a rapidly improving Abington High squad, 54-27.

Skippers gear up for the stretch run

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPENDENT

"Ya got heart, kid." So said Rocky's trainer, Mickey (invariably, and accurately, described as "crusty") to the Italian Stallion. The same compliment could be given to the CHS boys' basketball team.

Young, inexperienced and riddled with nagging injuries, the Skippers have nonetheless showed their mettle, and stand only a few bounces, tips, or caroms away from a .500 record.

At 4-7, coach Ron Ford's team has seen more than its fair share of tight games.

Monday's loss to Hanover, the top ranked team in the South Shore League, was only by eight points and Cohasset had stayed close the entire game.

Friday's loss to Abington was a one point defeat.

The Skippers had trailed by sixteen at the half but, behind ten straight Skipper points from sophomore Erik Shea, they rallied and cut the Green Wave lead to one point with six minutes to go.

The tide would turn, though, and CHS trailed by eight points. Team leading scorer Jamie DeMichele fouled out on a questionable call with time remaining, but the Skippers still had a chance to win with time winding down.

Raheem Shepard's free throw cut Abington's lead to 57-56.

Then, with fifteen ticks left on the clock, sophomore point guard Daniel Trowers drove the lane and scored, giving Cohasset a one point edge.

This would be short-lived, however, as Abington took the inbounds pass the length of the court and scored to give them the win, 59-58.

The loss was a heartbreaker for Cohasset, but also a growing pain for a young team on the rise. Last Tuesday's game was the opposite, a dramatic win in much the same fashion.

The Skippers hosted the Hull Pirates in the hostile SkipperDome, and the game came right down to the wire.

DeMichele led his team with 23 points and six rebounds and was followed by junior Matt O'Reilly, who pitched in 11 points.

Senior inside force Raheem Shepard pitched in seven points, along with five boards, four steals, and four assists. Not a bad night.

But DeMichele was the hero of the night. His three-pointer, which swished through the twine and hit the hardwood with quadruple zeros on the clock, won the game for Cohasset.

To those at courtside, DeMichele's post-launch manner was similar to that of Larry Bird winning the three point contest and walking off the court with index finger raised high.

The triple was the biggest shot of DeMichele's career and a defining moment in the captain's season of leadership.

Senior forward Jamie DeMichele looks for the open man Monday night against Hanover. DeMichele, the team captain, and friends have some work to do if they want to make it back to the state hoop tourney this season.

Cohasset has been getting solid play in the middle from rapidly improving big man Khalil Madyun, the team's starting center.

Swingman Paul Hussey is a threat from outside, and forward Raheem Shepard is a reliable presence on the offensive boards. Shea's game has improved as he's stepped into the starting role, and Trowers gains valuable experience with every game.

Newcomer Matt O'Reilly's marksmanship has added an unexpected facet to the Skipper offense.

Still, the star has been DeMichele, who nearly single-handedly brought the Skippers back against Hanover.

Team play and an abundance of heart has brought the Skippers to midseason.

From here, they must go 6-3 in order to qualify for the state tournament.

Their game is coming along and their effort is not in question. Mickey would approve.

The Bridgewater State College baseball team will hold its 11th annual pitching and hitting clinic from Saturday to Monday, Feb. 13 to 15. The clinic will be divided into two groups that participate in a two-hour session each of the three days.

'Skips' trip up Hull

The Skippers continue to set sail for win number two against Norwell on Friday before traveling to Carver on Tuesday before returning to the home gym next Friday (Feb. 5) for their important return match with Hull.

Getting back to the Hull win, it was a career night from senior guard Alyssa McNamara and a career shot from Caitlin O'Neil that put the Skippers over the top in the win.

McNamara, an All-Star in soccer and the reigning CHS Homecoming Queen, poured in 23 points in the win which blew away her previous career high of 16.

Eight of those points came in the overtime period when McNamara led the Skippers the win even though two starters had fouled out, O'Neil and Megan Connolly, and another, Katie Brister, was missing because of an injury.

Down three points with time running out, O'Neil banked in a bomb from outside the three-point arc to send the game into overtime.

New partnership pays off for gymnasts

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

This bi-town, one-team gig, better known as the Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics squad, is turning into an intriguing partnership. The long cold winter expected in these parts has taken a very warm turn.

Who'd have thought the scotch-tape approach to save two gymnastics programs would result in five wins in the first seven meets?

Heading into this week, the CN squad was sporting a 5-2 record (4-2, Pilgrim Conference) and in the midst of a four-meet winning streak. In fact, if not for a tough night on the balance beam against Hanover, CN could very well be holding an almost unbelievable 6-1 mark.

And that has head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni, for one, smiling from ear to ear. The season, she admits, has been a pleasant surprise so far. Ardizzoni knows that the wins from here on in can change the entire look of the conference.

"We were thinking at the beginning of the season we wouldn't be doing this well," Ardizzoni said. "We figured we'd finish in fourth or fifth place. We're secure in fourth place. In the past four meets the girls have really come together as a team."

With consecutive victories over Hingham, Randolph, Carver and Notre Dame and the Norwell girls making some definite improvements, the CN girls' confidence is bubbling. They knew they'd get better with every meet, but never realistically thought they'd be in the thick of the conference standings.

The Hingham meet Jan. 12 was one of those competitions where the girls didn't give themselves much of a chance prior to the season. CN though, put the sting on the Harbormen, squeaking out a 117-117.05 win.

The threesome of Kristen Sheerin, Carlie Carter and Tara Hettstrom provided the fire power for CN with each scoring valuable points.

Sheerin pulled off a fantastic beam routine for first place and an 8.45 mark. The tiny gymnast also tied Carter for first on the bars (7.8) to go along with second-place marks on the vault (8.0), floor exercise (8.45) and all-around (32.7). Hettstrom came away with three third-place performances, the best coming in the all-around where she was edged out by Sheerin, but still registered a fine 32.55, Hettstrom landed solid vault and floor routines at 7.8 and 8.25, respectively.

The durable Carter, who hasn't missed a practice in three seasons, placed third on the beam (7.7) to go along with her bar win.

There was no letdown after the huge Hingham win as CN had to go right back to the gym the following night against Randolph. The girls, Sheerin in particular, were in fine form on their way to disposing of the Blue Devils 117.6-113.4.

Sheerin broke Erica Hettstrom's school record on the balance beam with an 8.7 first-place performance for one of her four victories. Hettstrom recorded an 8.6 three years ago.

Sheerin also had her best vault of the season (8.3) which was good enough to garner second. Charter was second on the bars (7.9), followed by Sheerin (7.5). Sheerin took first on floor (8.4) and all-around (32.9) to dominate the meet. Hettstrom came away with a pair of thirds on beam (7.3) and floor (7.9).

Lauren Genovese had her best score of the season on the floor (7.4) to take third in CN's lopsided Jan. 20 win over Carver. Sheerin, Carter and Hettstrom all had wins in the 116.55-105.2 rout.

Sheerin had wins in the all-around (31.35), beam (8.0) and tied Hettstrom for first on floor (8.25). Carter won the bars in 7.8 and Hettstrom beat Sheerin in the vault, 7.8 to 7.7.

The best win of the streak was the season-best 117.9 total CN registered to defeat Notre Dame of Hingham. ND also had its best meet of the winter with an overall score of 116.05.

CN had its highest half-time mark this winter (58.65) and got a big meet from Norwell's Alison Duffney, who improved a full point on her floor routine.

Carter and Sheerin finished 1-2 on bars (8.1 and 8.0) and Sheerin (8.6) led the 1-2 showing with Hettstrom (8.35) on floor.

Norwell's Pattie LaCroix has been improving dramatically on the bars and floor during the past three meets, while Julie Callahan and Beth Jackson have also come up with some of their best scores of the season.

CN was scheduled to meet first-place Scituate earlier this week before the big finale against Hanover Wednesday. And with Hingham coming up Feb. 1, the CN girls couldn't be more focused.

"They have the drive right now," Ardizzoni said. "They want to beat Hanover and Hingham really bad."

Never say never in this winter of content.

NDA second quarter honor roll

Principal's List is awarded for a grade point average of 3.9 or better.

First Honors is awarded for a GPA of 3.7 or better.

Second Honors is awarded for students with a GPA of 3.4 or better.

Cohasset students: Allison Berg, Principal's List; Stephanie Canton, Second Honors; Emily Coyne, Second Honors; Kristen Devine, First Honors; Anna Roche, Second Honors; and Elizabeth Smoot, First Honors.

People's choice awards offered

In order to enhance the beauty of the halls at Cohasset Middle/High School and give the students a sense of participation in the long-term design of the halls of the school, many students have already worked to paint murals in the hallways of the school. The new "gallery" in the art classroom area gives the students another avenue for expression.

Building on those opportunities for students to contribute to the long-term beauty of the building, and be recognized for their efforts, Ripley librarian Joan Gallagher and Mary DeLeon of the art department are organizing the People's Choice Art Award.

All students from grades 7-12 are invited to enter their creative efforts in the People's Choice Art Award. Work can be in any media and can be produced in class or independently. All entries must be submitted by Monday, Feb. 8; voting for the People's Choice will take place Wednesday, Feb. 10. All students, staff and visiting parents may vote on the day. Winners will be announced Feb. 9.

There will be two categories — grades 7-9 and 10-12. Prize winners will receive a cash stipend for their work which will be professionally prepared and placed on permanent display near the Ripley and art classrooms.

"It is our hope," said media specialist Gallagher, "that this will become an annual event that will both encourage students to further express themselves while enhancing the school environment."

Local student to join DC government conference

Stephen Reynolds, a student at Cohasset High School, will travel to our nation's capital as a participant in the Presidential Classroom Scholars Program, America's premier civic education program. The program will take place Feb. 13 to 20.

Joining hundreds of high school students from across the country and abroad, Stephen will take part in seminars presented by leaders representing each branch of government, the military, media and business. Students are also scheduled for a private tour of the White House, appointments with their Senators' and Representatives' offices and a visit to a foreign embassy.

Small-group workshops will focus on issues such as media, immigration and juvenile justice. Discussion and debate will be balanced with visits to Washington's monuments and Smithsonian museums, an evening of political satire with The Capital Steps and a commencement celebration.

Since 1969, Presidential Classroom has provided more than 78,000 of America's finest students with unprecedented access to Washington's halls of power and the people shaping public policy.

To participate, students must be juniors or seniors in high school, hold a "B" average or higher or rank in the top 25 percent of their class, and show commitment to community or school involvement through participation in co-curricular activities.

Free financial aid packets

As many local students and their families begin applying for college financial aid, Congressman Bill Delahunt made available — free of charge — updated information packets on higher education assistance.

The Delahunt packets are intended to help families shoulder these expenses by explaining the types and amount of assistance from a variety of potential sources.

Each of the 1999 packets contains federal financial aid forms and guides, details on programs at Massachusetts colleges and universities, and background on scholarships and other private aid. Also included is a list of Internet websites for college, financial aid and career planning.

To obtain a packet, call Congressman Delahunt's office at 1-(800) 870-2626 (Cape and Islands), or 1-(800) 794-9911 (South Shore). Families may also visit Delahunt's website at http://www.house.gov/delahunt/finaid2.htm for links to several resources aimed at helping

Forum on adolescents in sports

On Wednesday, Feb. 3, the Hingham Sports Partnership and the Hingham Middle School PTO will cosponsor a forum on "Adolescents in Sports," moderated by Channel 4 sports reporter Alice Cooke, a former Olympic skater. Distinguished panelists will include: Dr. Leonard Zaichkowsky; Coach Sarah Behn and Dr. John Yeager. Dr. Zaichkowsky is the sport psychologist for the Boston Celtics and is head of the sport and exercise psychology program at Boston University. Sarah Behn is the Varsity Women's basketball and soccer coach at Framingham State College and the all time leading scorer in Big East history (men and women), earning 2,523 points during her basketball career at Boston College. Dr. Yeager, a member of the New England Lacrosse Hall of Fame, is an associate scholar at Boston University's Center for the Advancement of Ethics and Character.

Topics to be addressed at the forum include finding a balance between academics and sports, the role of parents in sports, the changing athletic abilities of adolescents, and ethics in sports — the messages our children are receiving. The panel discussion will begin at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 3 in the auditorium of the middle school at 1103 Main St. in Hingham. (The winter storm date is Feb. 10.) Funding for this forum has been provided by the Hingham Sports Partnership, and it is open to the entire South Shore community free of charge.

Seniors offered reassurance over the telephone

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

It's been used in a number of towns with success, and now Cohasset's seniors can benefit from a daily check-up phone call and even have errands run if necessary.

"If we have someone who is elderly and living alone, we call Monday through Friday, say, between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m., just to make sure everything is okay and to find out if they need something," said outreach worker Carol Barrett, RN, of Cohasset Elder Affairs.

Barrett is the coordinator of the program, which is free of charge and one of many services provided by the CEA to local seniors.

If someone is out of basics, such as milk or bread, Barrett will purchase the items and deliver it to the senior's home before day's end.

Because of her nursing background, Barrett can also advise callers that that persistent cough or aches and pains should be checked out by a doctor.

The "telephone assurance program" began Jan. 1 and has so far had "very few" calls, Barrett said, but large numbers of callers was unlikely.

Many of the seniors already have a safety system set up for themselves, with a friend, family member, or several regular callers a day who check in to share a "phone visit" and make sure that all is well.

Sometimes, however, family members are away or children and work concerns might get in the way of those calls. That's when a safety net like the CEA's program can make a difference.

"In other towns, it's been a lifesaver," said Barrett. "We're just starting out with this, but I'm sure we'll eventually find that someone has had a problem, such as they've fallen."

That danger has led Barrett to recommend a personal emergency response service to the over-80 group she visits.

Personal emergency response services go by a variety of names, such as First Alert or Lifeline. The services provide a device that can be worn about the neck, and left at the bedside at night so that emergency medical help is only a press of a button away.

"There are a number of services that provide this," said Barrett. "All you do is press a button and a dispatcher will immediately call you. They will call you again in 15 minutes and if you don't respond, they will send emergency medical help to you."

Outreach workers will do the paperwork for those who find it overwhelming.

Barrett visits those who are interested in the telephone service and discusses what the program can offer. She also mentions the personal emergency response service and discusses its cost and benefits.

"We're just starting and expect it to be slow," said Barrett. "At this time, the interest in it has been very reassuring. Studies have shown that seniors usually can set-up a system for themselves when they are home bound, but it's never a bad idea to have an extra safety net."

If you are interested in the telephone reassurance program, call the CEA office at 383-9112 and ask for Carol Barrett.

ACT NOW FOR A WORRY-FREE WINTER.

Police made 14 arrests in December

December was a fairly routine month for the Police Department, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

During the month, the department made a total of 14 arrests. There were four each for outstanding warrants and motor vehicle violations. There were three protective custody arrests and one arrest each for assault and battery, minor transporting alcohol and failure to register as a sex offender.

There were three breaking and enterings during the month of December. Two were residences and one a business.

During December the Police Department received a total of 620 calls for service. Of those calls, 94 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls.

During December the department issued 182 traffic citations for fines totaling $6,325 and 61 parking tickets for fines totaling $935.

And, finally, to be in compliance with the new Massachusetts Firearms Law, Ch. 140, Sec. 131L, that came into effect Oct. 21, 1998, all officers of the Cohasset Police Department were each issued gun safety locks.

New librarian spins wheels of literacy at Osgood

system. She also provides shelf-markers that tell the children where to locate individual books. The markers are left on the shelf where the book was taken from.

"I've color-coded everything," she said. "This place is never a mess. I want the children to understand that there is a library etiquette and that it's a place for everyone to share. So if they see a book that's light blue mixed in with dark blue, they put it back where it goes."

On an average day, which begins at 8:10 am., children may pop in to return a library book, even if the book isn't due yet. (O'Leary established that policy to encourage the children to visit.) About five classes a day of kindergarten through grade three children spend instruction time in the library.

"Lessons usually include reading a story and then talking about different components of the book, its illustrations and the author," she said. "After that, the children have time to choose a book to take home for the week."

O'Leary feels most satisfied when a child takes out a book that he normally wouldn't choose, and thinks parents can learn something from allowing their children to explore books that they might not be thrilled with.

"A good book for a child is one that somehow touches him," she said. "Be accepting of what your child wants to read. Some literature isn't great and I wouldn't recommend it, but if it lets the child get over that slump, they will probably pick out a wider variety of books later."

For precocious readers, O'Leary recommends that parents utilize librarians for help picking out books that may suit the child's reading ability without exposing them to things that are inappropriate.

"Do introduce them to books at libraries, both public and at their school," she said. "Marjorie Murphy, the librarian at Deer Hill, is also terrific at getting kids motivated to read."

Another method O'Leary has come up with to pique picky readers' interest is a reading program that highlights books that were later made into movies.

"Anne has been great at requesting funding for new books," said Cantelmo. "We hadn't been able to keep our library current and we didn't have money allocated for a real state of the art library in the new school either. She's asked the PSO for help, and they've responded on numerous occasions within the last year with $1,000-at-a-time donations to help increase our collection."

O'Leary said that the new library section designed for teaching the children a lesson is a plus, because it has a wall behind it to separate the story-corner from the rest of the library. That way, a teacher can work on research with students while another group listens to O'Leary's dramatic readings, which include a variety of voices. "Sometimes they yell, 'No, you're using the wrong voice!' for a character," she laughed.

There is also elbow room for the books with lots of empty shelf space to fill with new reading material.

Her ultimate dream for the library is to update it so that it can support the curriculum in classrooms.

"I'd like teachers to be able to come in and say, 'I'm doing a unit on stars,' and I can supply them with supporting material," she said.

O'Leary also appreciates the parents who come in to volunteer. She has hopes that the library will become more of a family place, with family resources and books in one section.

New librarian spins wheels of literacy at Osgood

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Anne O'Leary can't recall her first visit to a library, but she can recall bicycling there to take out biographies. Today, Cohasset's first full-time elementary school librarian mostly spins her wheels to figure out how to get kids hooked on books.

"The best part of my job is when I read a story to the children and they really get into it," said O'Leary. "One little girl last week said to me, 'I feel like I was in that story when you read it.' You can see that they are caught up in the book by the expressions on their faces."

O'Leary began her career as a school teacher nine years ago before her three children were born. She left teaching after the birth of her second child but began work in the Scituate library children's room.

When the position came up at the old Osgood school, O'Leary knew it was the perfect job for her.

"It sounded like the best job in the world to me because the only thing I hated about being a classroom teacher was the last day of school when I knew that I wouldn't get to see the kids again," she said. "But here, I get to see these kids for four years and I don't have to give them up at the end of the year."

O'Leary was an aide last year and was one of the 10 interviewed by a team of Osgood staff for the librarian position.

"We advertised in the Globe and Anne was just outstanding in the group of people that we interviewed," said Osgood principal Marilee Cantelmo. "Which was fortunate for us, because she brings three traits with her: great rapport with kids, strong knowledge of children's literature and great people skills to work with staff and parents."

Until this year, Osgood never had a full-time librarian but the school was also without a reading specialist so it was decided that it would benefit staff and the children to have a trained librarian.

"I tend to lie awake at night thinking about things like, how can I make the Dewey Decimal System interesting for them."
— Anne O'Leary, Osgood librarian

"We had asked for a couple of years and finally got the support to get it included in the budget," said Cantelmo. "Our budgets have so been so tight but there is so much focus on reading now and we want our curriculum to be as strong as possible, so we need a strong advocate like Anne."

What's it like to be first full-time librarian at Cohasset's elementary school, as well as possibly the first the first introduction a child has to the library?

"I feel like that is so important," said O'Leary. "Not all the towns have librarians. Many of the smaller ones have aides and when the kids go to the library, they watch videos and pick out their books but they're not taught how it works. If you reel these kids in now while they're into it and have the independence to take home a book, then you catch them and it continues."

If O'Leary has her way, all children who pass through the doors of her library will leave with a love of reading and the ability to be a self-sufficient learner.

"This year, the library is so critical to supporting classroom teachers in reading instruction," said Cantelmo. "Anne has worked under great difficulties since the beginning of the year because the shelves weren't installed until December."

The lack of shelves in the library meant that O'Leary was Osgood's "librarian-on-wheels," making her way down the school halls to different classrooms with books piled high on a cart.

"I didn't even have a library until the mid-December," said O'Leary. "I was walking to the rooms with my little cart and then one day the cart wheels broke and books fell all over the place."

But such mishaps are not the stuff that O'Leary's thoughts remain on for long.

"I tend to lie awake at night thinking about things like, how can I make the Dewey Decimal System interesting for them," she said.

"The kids now know that recreation books are in the 700s so if they want, say, a sports book, they can find one there," she said.

That's partly because of little tricks that O'Leary has come up with, like color-coding the book sections to match up with the Dewey decimal

Towns ask T for new train study

By Mary Ford and Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITERS

The 13 selectmen in Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate may not agree on every issue about the train.

But they are united on at least one front: that the MBTA should be required to conduct another environmental feasibility study on the Greenbush Line of the Old Colony Railroad Project.

To that end, they've all signed a letter to the state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert A. Durand asking for the new report. And to press their point, the selectmen also asked to meet with Durand, who recently replaced former secretary Trudy Coxe, as soon as possible.

The selectmen said neither the South Shore nor train technology are what they were five years ago when the supplemental draft report on Greenbush was released.

"Since the original (report) was produced, nearly five years ago, the body of technical knowledge on which the MBTA's analyses are based has changed," the letter said. "Federal agencies have adopted, or are considering the adoption of new regulations to deal with train-related safety and health issues, including diesel emissions. User demographics and habits have also changed."

At a meeting last week at Hingham Town Hall where representatives from the three boards hammered out the language of the letter, all agreed times had changed. They cited increased commuter boat service, the proposed development of the former Weymouth Naval Air Station, and local demographics as conditions which have altered

Cohasset Mariner wins top honors

The Cohasset Mariner is the best weekly newspaper in its circulation class in New England, according to judges for 1998 New England Better Newspaper Competition.

The Cohasset Mariner won first place in the General Excellence category which encompasses everything from writing, reporting and emphasis of news — to photography, design, use of headlines and overall community significance.

Judges said they were impressed with the Cohasset Mariner's writing, editing and design, noting "Good coverage of breaking news and good photography throughout. Inside pages are neat and clean, unlike the jumbled mess we saw in some entries. Overall the paper has a clean, crisp look.."

CNC/South editor in chief Mark Skala said the general excellence award, along with so many others, are a credit to the team approach.

"This award truly involves many people and the judges thought our paper was the best in New England in this circulation category," Skala said. "It takes a lot of hard work every week and we are fortunate to cover one of the most interesting regions in the country. That's what makes the papers so unique and worthwhile."

The Cohasset paper was also among five from all of New England nominated for the prestigious George A. Speers Newspaper of the Year Award.

Contest winners were announced to newspaper publishers, editors, staff and guests at the awards banquet last Friday at the World Trade Center in Boston.

Harbor dredging project is sunk until autumn

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The latest news about the completion of the harbor dredging is a real drudge. The dredging project will not be completed by the Feb. 15 deadline and the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) has refused to grant the Army Corps of Engineers a three-week extension. DEP denied the extension because it is now the fish spawning season. The project will have to be delayed until November.

The delays have been caused by bad weather and rough seas, which prevent barges from transporting the dredged material to disposal areas. Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said the town would have to explore all of its options. One other option would be to bring in more barges, but there is no room in the harbor. Town Manager Mark Haddad said 10 other communities have experienced similar delays because of the weather and all are seeking permit extensions from DEP.

At Tuesday' selectmen's meeting, Haddad said the delays would not affect the boating season, but would have a large financial impact on the town.

"We will not shorten the boating season again," Haddad said. "What the delay does cost-wise to the federal government is nothing, but what it does to the town of Cohasset is significant."

Haddad wants residents to understand that the dredging is not a town of Cohasset project. The Army Corps of Engineers is in charge of the dredging. The town has no control over the project. Currently, the contractor has finished dredging the channel, Bailey's Creek, the cove and the main part of the harbor. Unfinished areas include sections by the break water and yacht club.

Although the town is not in charge of the dredging, it is responsible for removing moorings so the dredging can take place. The town has spent $46,000 so far out of a $100,000 budget to remove the moorings for the dredging. There are 250 moorings, but 50 will have to be removed again next fall to complete the project. Town officials had hoped to use any leftover money from the project to offset the large budget deficit projected for fiscal year 2000. Now, that money will most likely have to be held in

Mosquito board member sought

Selectmen accepted the resignation this week of Ned Tebbetts from the Cohasset Mosquito Control Committee.

"The Mosquito Control Committee does very important work," said Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris. "We hope anyone with a background in health or with an interest in serving will come forward."

"Or anyone who has been bitten by a mosquito," Selectman Merle Brown quipped.

Interested citizens should contact the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

Selectmen will send Tebbetts a letter of thanks for his service on the committee.

Libby Pompeo will be missed

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said in her role as liaison to the Council on Elder Affairs, she has been very fortunate to get to know some older people.

"One of those older people was Libby Pompeo," she said. "I extend my sympathies to her family and friends. I know she'll be missed at the senior center."

Pompeo passed away last Thursday.

Pay as You Throw on agenda

The South Shore Recycling Cooperative, which includes Cohasset, will take up "Pay as You Throw" at its next meeting at 7:30 p.m., Feb. 18 at Hingham Town Hall. Selectman Merle Brown who also sits on the cooperative urged all interested citizens to attend.

New traffic rules accepted

Selectmen accepted the new traffic rules that were updated by the tr[illegible] study committee.

The original rules were approved in the 1940s, Selectman Merle Brown said this week. Brown also sits on the traffic committee.

Some noteworthy changes include increasing the penalty for defacing or stealing a street sign from $20 to $200.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris pointed out some of the old rules, which provided a window to the past. Streets will no longer be closed for coasting in the snow, which was one of the outdated regulations in the old traffic rules booklet. Also, the old booklet described "rural and urban" areas in town.

Town Manager Mark Haddad will send the updated rules to the printer and copies should be available soon for public viewing at the selectmen's office, town clerk's office and the library.

Pre-blasting survey conducted

Town Manager Mark Haddad said residents of North Cohasset have received letters that the process to hook their homes up individually to the sewer main recently laid in the streets of that part of town is about to get underway.

The installation will involve some blasting of ledge.

Haddad said he scheduled a pre-construction conference with the contractor and police and fire departments this week.

School budget powwow

The school committee will present the school department's proposed FY2000 budget to selectmen Tuesday. The school department is seeking more money than Town Manager Mark Haddad allowed for in his budget proposal that, if approved at town meeting, will increase the expected deficit and therefore, the amount of the override.

Selectmen were disappointed at their meeting Tuesday that the school committee did not have a draft of the school budget for selectmen to peruse before the joint meeting.

Selectman Tom Callahan expects to have a tough talk about money with the school board.

"We need to have give and take on various items," he said.

Updated train tracking document

Selectmen will send a terse letter to the MBTA asking the agency to send an updated tracking document on outstanding mitigation issues related to the train. The MBTA plans to restore railroad service along the abandoned Greenbush Line, which runs through Cohasset.

The document is "unique to Cohasset" and contains a list of 100 to 200 items, train mitigation committee chairman Thomas Gruber said. Items such as the North Main Street drop off and grade crossings on private ways are in the document, which provide the status of any open issues.

"It's sort of a scorecard on where you are," he explained.

"Our mission is to protect the town, but the other party won't even come to the table," Gruber said.

Gruber fears the train will be like an opening at an art museum.

"The curtains will part and there will be the train, all designed," he said, describing the MBTA as "a veritable wasteland of information."

Town to embark on master plan

Process may take a year or more

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

For the first time in more than 35 years, the town will soon tackle developing a master plan to answer future zoning, sewer and building issues.

It was way back in 1961, that Cohasset last examined how to handle future growth in the oft mentioned "Benjamin Report" which was drawn up at a time when the town had seen a population increase of more than 56 percent in just 10 years. But the Benjamin Report apparently sat on the shelf — with many of its recommendations never coming to pass.

"This will be a very inclusive process and we'll be getting input from all kinds of people, boards and whatever expertise they bring."
— Selectman Tom Callahan

"People always mention it, but then they always say that nobody pays attention to it anyway," said Ted Guild, sewer commission chairman, about the report.

Today, who could imagine a new access highway from Route 3A to the town's center, together with spurs to North Main and Elm streets and Jerusalem Road?

The Benjamin Report thought it was a good idea because it would distribute Route 3A traffic to all parts of town.

With recommendations like that, some question the need for a sweeping town plan and point to the Benjamin Report as evidence that such an exercise can be a waste of money.

Planning board chairman Al Moore said recently there isn't enough unused space in town to necessitate a master plan, however the planning board does have a seat at the table.

Member Robert Sturdy, who will serve as the planning board's representative, will involve the planning board with the growth and development committee. That sits well with Moore who said that Sturdy has a way of cutting down to the nitty-gritty amidst the discussion of some large plan, finding a major flaw that no one else could notice.

The committee will also include citizens, Lisa Bumstead, Nancy Herlin and Neil Glick, as well as a member from the conservation commission.

"This will be a very inclusive process and we'll be getting input from all kinds of people, boards and whatever expertise they bring," said Selectman Tom Callahan. "It will be a complicated process and we will look to see that the town's future growth, zoning, infrastructure, and where we will go with sewering, receives input from many corners. It won't be limited to just these seven people who will say, 'Here is the master plan.'"

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris said the town has more available land for development than some may think.

"There are actually a number of acres that are developable in the town of Cohasset, which is surprising. People think there is very little of it, particularly with the new Title V," said McMorris who will join Callahan on the new committee.

Rather than a master plan, Moore thinks the town could use a "show-and-tell" on the undeveloped land situation in the upcoming town meeting.

"I'm in the process of trying to develop a little show-and-tell," said Moore. "There was an article that ranked all the towns in the South Shore and how much undeveloped land was remaining in each. Cohasset is at the top of the list, number one, but it's very misleading. It's because we have so much park land. We have Wompatuck and Whitney Woods, plus there is a batch of conservation land, bird sanctuaries—if you strip all that away—which is terrific that we have all that land in perpetuity to remain natural, the remainder is pretty well developed. I wanted to show people that with a kind of an overlay map. I think it's very good that we probe at this, but that's a far idea from developing a master plan."

One area McMorris cites for concern is the former Webb-Norfolk conveyor site, which encompasses 60-plus acres of undeveloped land across Route 3A. Rezoning of that acreage for residential housing could have a major impact on the town.

"Right now, I don't think we can handle any major development like that," McMorris said. "We just built the new elementary school, we're at capacity at the old schools and we have to be very careful about development."

Some areas in town currently being developed include Rose Hill's 15 homes, Lamberts Lane's 12 (and maybe more), plus there are new homes on Ledgewood Drive and in Kendall Village.

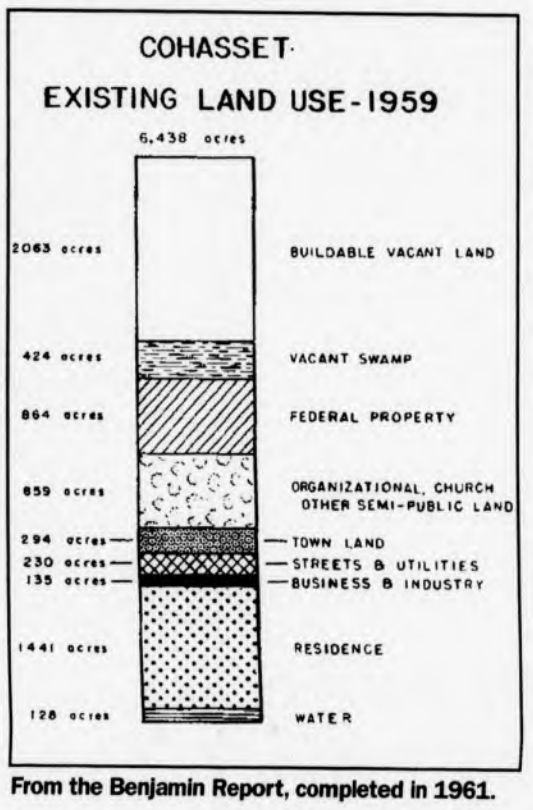
"These little pockets of development are happening all over town and the impact those developments have on the town is that they draw on town resources," said McMorris, who also stated that current zoning doesn't make sense and should be updated.

But Moore said high-priced homes are not a burden to the town.

"Rose Hill—the average selling price is close to $600,000," said Moore. "There will be maybe 15 when it's done. That's nine million bucks. At our tax rate, that's quite a few dollars. I've got to think that that's got to be probably $100,000 a year in taxes, maybe more.

"Do we have to hire one extra teacher because of those homes? I think the town is making out pretty well on those small developments. You would have to be careful if it's high density housing where you could pack a lot of people into a small area at low cost," he said.

Cohasset isn't alone in its consideration of a master plan for the town. Hingham is in the early stages of developing a master plan that is expected to cover issues such as transportation, economic development, housing, open space, public facilities and recreation and leisure time activities.



From the Benjamin Report, completed in 1961.

Population comparison

Town	1960 Census
Hanover	5,923
COHASSET	5,840
Marshfield	6,748
Scituate	11,214
Braintree	31,069
Duxbury	4,727
Hingham	15,378
Kingston	4,302
Norwell	5,207
Weymouth	48,177
Hull	7,055

From the Benjamin Report, a long range general plan for Cohasset, completed in 1961.

Callahan explained that no one knows at this time how much a plan for Cohasset would cost, but that a proposed article to hire a planner for $10,000 will likely go to town meeting. However, a representative from the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, a regional agency that works with municipalities on planning issues, will meet with the growth and development committee at 7:30 p.m., Feb. 4 at town hall to discuss how the MAPC can help.

"The whole purpose of the representative being there is to take us through the process and to give us a better sense of the cost," said Callahan.

Issues to be covered in the master plan will include transportation, housing for the elderly and municipal services, as well as more town sewering, which may open up certain areas of town for new development.

"Yes, a plan will cost money," McMorris said. "But so will the developments that come because whatever money that comes in from the new developments won't offset the costs they will accrue in their drain on town services."

McMorris said that Dean Rizzo and the Village Revitalization Committee have been planning for the village area and that that plan will be incorporated with the master plan.

"I think it would take at least a year to finish a master plan," McMorris estimated. "It's a very public participation type of process and should take at least a year, if not more."

Moore said developing a master plan could be a waste of time..

"We're just saying, let's not spend a fortune and time on something that isn't going to change what we already know," said Moore. "There are some areas that can benefit, but if we're sitting back thinking that there is this massive amount of development that could be staring you in the face, I don't think so."

The growth and development committee and a representative from the Metropolitan Area Planning Council will hold a public meeting at 7:30 p.m., Feb. 4 in town hall.

Good, Kasperowicz to enter election

No races yet for open seats

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Raymond Kasperowicz, 172 S. Main St., and incumbent William Good, 269 Atlantic Ave., were the only residents to take out election nomination papers this past week.

Good, who has served on the planning board for 10 years and as its vice chairman for three of those years, is a sales and marketing executive in the health care industry and a 23-year resident of Cohasset.

Good served as a three-year member of the Personnel Committee prior to his election to the planning board.

"I'd like to serve another term because I believe that my background, knowledge of the town and its critical long term planning issues, and my 10 years of board experience qualify me uniquely for the position," Good said.

Raymond Kasperowicz explained that he is interested in serving on the sewer commission because he was one of the people involved with its chairman Ted Guild in trying to seek a solution to the town's sewerage problems.

"Way back, both Ted and I were talking about running and I made a wise choice and made Ted run first," said Kasperowicz. "It ended up being more work than either of us thought. But with Ted stepping down, I guess out of guilt, I should pick up the slack and make a contribution. I'm hopeful that the town will receive my candidacy receptively and help us out and we'll try to come up with reasonable solutions in an economic and equitable fashion."

Last week, two long-time incumbents announced that they would not seek reelection April 10.

Edward "Ted" Guild, who has served on the sewer commission for 16 years — more than half as chairman —decided to call it a day.

And James Lagrotteria won't seek a fifth term on the board of assessors.

In addition to Good and Kasperowicz, other residents who have obtained nomination papers from the town clerk's office are as follows:

Incumbents planning to seek reelection include selectmen Nan Roth and Ronnie McMorris; Town Moderator George Marlette, Town Clerk Marion Douglas, water commissioner Richard Muncey and library trustees Sheila Evans and Roger Lowe.

School committee chairman Rick Shea, school committee secretary Joseph McElroy and health board chairman Kevin Ulmer have announced they won't seek reelection to their respective boards.

Newcomer Ann Barrett, 60 Elm St., has taken out papers for a seat on the Cohasset Housing Authority held by Betty Grassie.

The deadline for returning nomination papers with the signatures of at least 50 registered voters is Feb. 22.

the dynamics on which proposed Greenbush "ridership" numbers were based.

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, said she would help facilitate a meeting with Durand, Cohasset Selectman Nan Roth said.

This is actually the second letter from the selectmen seeking assistance from the environmental affairs office. The first one, which went off without the support of two of the five Cohasset selectmen, was sent to Coxe just before she tendered her resignation last fall. At the time, Cohasset selectmen Diane Sullivan and chairman Ronnie McMorris objected to the letter which included language about the number of grade crossings and mentioned that other transportation options may now be feasible and should be looked at. Sullivan and McMorris interpreted that language as "anti-train" and stressed the towns had agreed to work together on issues of mutual concern and no more. Those common issues included noise, vibration and air pollution.

It's not clear how much time that the new study, if required, will add to the restoration of the Greenbush Line, which is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad Project. Greenbush is already several years behind schedule. The Plymouth and Middleboro lines started rolling in September 1997.

The towns never received a response to the letter to Coxe.

Nevertheless, the idea of a new letter resurfaced and this time the "tri-town" committee rewrote the letter with language all 13 selectmen could support.

Hingham's Greenbush coordinator Alexander Macmillan took the letter around to the boards of selectmen in the three towns Tuesday for their signatures.

It's not clear how much time that the new study, if required, will add to the restoration of the Greenbush Line, which is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad Project. Greenbush is already several years behind schedule. The Plymouth and Middleboro lines started rolling in September 1997.

Cohasset's Greenbush Mitigation Committee chairman Thomas Gruber was cautiously optimistic that the letter would have an impact.

"Three towns working together has got to get them to pay attention that we're here," he said.

reserve to pull out the 50 moorings in the autumn.

Selectman first discussed the problem at their Jan. 28 meeting. Selectman Nan Roth said it was obvious that there would be delays. Roth complained that the contractor — chosen by the Army Corps of Engineers as the low bidder —was using inadequate and unreliable equipment for the job.

"We've been warning them and telling them we saw a problem," Roth said on Jan. 28. "Now, our fears are coming home. The low bidder is not up to the task."

Haddad said it is true that there have been some equipment problems and breakdowns, but the weather is the real problem. Contractors believe it is too hazardous to transport full barges in rough seas.

Report on Osgood-Deer Hill driveway due

An engineering report on the driveway and parking at Osgood-Deer Hill is expected to be completed by Feb. 5 and sent to school superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey, who will meet with the school building committee Feb. 10 to discuss a final report from the engineering firm.

Two weeks ago, an engineer from Nitsch Engineering of Boston met with Malvey, Osgood principal Marilee Cantelmo and Deer Hill principal Thomas Callahan and did a schematic drawing of the parking lot and driveway shared by the two schools.

The completed report will be submitted to building committee and will be discussed at the Feb. 10 meeting.

School technology to get budget ax

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Although the town is expecting a sizable deficit in next year's budget, the schools have to make up an existing $370K shortfall this year.

School officials said part of the money appropriated to the schools last fall for technology may be shelved because of the school deficit, which is largely due to an increase in residential placements for special education students.

"We think technology is important, but we're essentially facing a situation where we'd have to cut programs and people to drastically cut expenditures and I don't think that's a good idea," school committee chairman Rick Shea said at a recent meeting.

A sum of $370,000 is needed for the school budget to cover the deficit for fiscal year 1999, which ends June 30. Town Manager Mark Haddad expects that $150,000 from the current free cash account and $50,000 from anticipated debt service, which was not needed, will be used to help meet that figure.

Another $150,000 will come from the free cash that was appropriated at the Oct. 26 special town meeting when voters approved $350,000 for Phase II of a four-part plan to bring Cohasset schools into the information age.

"The school department wants to take back the $150,000 and move it into the budget deficit," Selectman Nan Roth said this week.

Shea said this would be a stop-gap measure and wouldn't derail the technology plan.

"This is a deferral and it will slow down our technology plan, but I think it's the prudent thing to do," Shea said.

Under the five-year-old Education Reform Act, school districts in Massachusetts are expected to bring their schools technologically up-to-date, but Massachusetts ranks 39th in its numbers of computers per classroom and 49th in computer networks throughout school district buildings.

The Educational Technology bond bill, submitted by then Governor William Weld in 1995, assumes that education technology is largely a local responsibility, but that the state can provide incentives and leverage for local spending by making limited amounts of state money available; can use incentives to promote the drafting of high quality local technology plans in the service of education reform; and can provide central network resources as a safety net to ensure that no one is left out.

So far, the Department of Education granted a total of $54,000 for Cohasset school district's technology plan, which was to go toward wiring and training.

Shea outlined the areas that caused the deficit, including $270,000 in SPED costs; $13,000 for two leased school buses; $35,000 to cover the cost of substitutes for teachers on maternity or sick leave and $50,000 more than anticipated to cover Osgood's utilities.

The schools will still need $20,000 more to cover this year's deficit.

Requests for the technology funding at last year's Oct. 26 Special Town Meeting were covered in two articles—$200,000 to purchase equipment and $150,000 for a hardware, software and training—so that more money wouldn't be borrowed than needed and so that there would be flexibility to do more than just buy equipment.

"This (using technology money) is the only real possibility we have of covering the expenditures for our out-of-district special education costs, which are running significantly ahead of budget for special needs children in day programs or residential programs," Shea said.

The school committee will ask town meeting next month to approve transferring the money to cover the budget shortfall.

Although Shea anticipates that lack of money will slow down the implementation of Phase II of the technology plan, he points out that a new director of technology hasn't been hired for the schools yet anyway. The previous director left for another school system in August. Finding a new director may not be an easy task, given that people with any kind of systems or technology experience are very much in demand in the commercial marketplace today, partly because of the Y2K issue and also because of the explosion of technology in the commercial workplace, he said.

Veteran's Agent funding will not change

The selectmen have decided not to increase the salary for the town's Veteran's Agent from $1,600 to $5,500. Town Manager Mark Haddad said a review of the position showed that there has been no activity in the office of the Veteran's Agent for the past 18 months. In that time, no veterans have filed claims or sought assistance. Haddad said it was difficult to tell if there was no activity because the Veteran's Agent wasn't doing his duties, or because there just aren't any claims. Haddad pointed out that no one has filed any complaints, so the issue seems to be one of inactivity. Haddad said he was comfortable keeping the salary at $1,600 because of the lack of activity.

DPW averts pumper disaster

The fire department is planning to replace "pumper three" next year. Unfortunately, the tank on the pumper blew apart two weeks ago, effectively rendering the vehicle useless. The options at that point were to decommission the vehicle as a pumper and use it only for emergency response, or spend $6,000 the town doesn't have for a new tank. Enter the DPW to the rescue. Workers from the DPW welded the tank and appear to have rescued the pumper for one more year of use. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the tank is being tested to make sure it can handle high water pressure. Selectman Merle Brown commended the DPW and fire department for finding a solution that saved the town money in tough economic times.

Town meeting to tackle permit fee issue

St. Anthony's could get its money back

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

St. Anthony's Church is feeling the sting of building permit fees after paying $18,000 late last year for a permit to build a new parish center. Some people think it's wrong for religious groups and non-profits to pay huge fees for new buildings. The selectmen agree. On Jan. 28, the selectmen voted to place an article on the town meeting warrant exempting non-profit institutions from building permit fees.

Marty Corry of Pleasant Street introduced the idea of a town meeting article at the Jan. 28 selectmen's meeting. The article, if approved, would prevent the town from charging building permit fees to non-profit organizations retroactive to Jan. 1, 1998. The goal of the retroactive clause is to refund St. Anthony's $18,000 fee. The selectmen wanted to waive the fee, but felt town bylaws prohibited such an action.

Corry proposed putting the article on the annual town meeting warrant. If the selectmen felt the article could not go on the warrant, Corry said a special town meeting might be necessary.

"You're suggesting holding a full-blown special town meeting with the requirements that go along with that?" asked selectman Nan Roth.

Corry said he got the sense from the members of the board of selectman that they wanted to waive the fees, but couldn't legally do so. He said St. Anthony's would support an article modeled after a bylaw in Nantucket that gave town officials the discretion to waive fees for religious institutions.

"There is broad support for this from our various religious institutions in town," Corry said. "This could serve as a focal point for getting the 200 signatures needed for a special town meeting."

Selectman Merle Brown supported the idea of waiving fees for non-profits, but he viewed Corry's suggestion for a special town meeting as a threat. Brown said Corry should have approached the selectmen earlier so they could have worked with religious leaders on a solution.

"Why did you wait so long to come in and threaten us by saying that if we don't do it you're going to call for a special town meeting," Brown said. "You had plenty of time to get our support."

Corry answered that it was not his or anyone else's intention to threaten the selectmen.

"It was a strategic decision, not a threat," Corry said. "The problem is when I entered the picture the board said it was not going to put an article on the warrant because it didn't want to hamstring future boards."

Selectman Diane Sullivan said she would support the article as long as it offered an exemption to all non-profits and if the policy was mandatory. Sullivan said she was concerned that future boards could be accused of discrimination if they gave the exemption to some non-profits but not others.

Corry actually proposed three versions. The first would waive fees for non-profits at the discretion of the board of selectmen. The second version would waive fees only for religious institutions at the discretion of the board of selectmen. The third version would waive fees automatically for religious institutions. The selectmen supported the first version with a language change that would make all exemptions for non-profits mandatory. The exemption would apply only to fees under the control of the board of selectmen. Non-profits would still be responsible for fees paid to other boards such as the conservation commission and the board of health.

AROUND TOWN

LIBBY WILL BE MISSED

We begin writing this article with a heavy heart this week, Cohasset has lost one of the finest ladies to ever grace the town. Libby Pompeo passed away last Thursday, and with that passing has left a void that will never be filled. Libby was a wonderful mom, granny and great-grandmother; she was a friend to all (did you ever see her without that beautiful smile on her face?); she was involved in all of the senior activities, and drove herself swimming every day to keep in shape! She should have written a book of her many adventures; and, what an awesome cook! Libby made the most of every one of her 80 years, and was an inspiration to all — oh, how we will miss her!

VACATION IN JAMAICA

Tom and Polly Doggett of Hugh Strain Road recently returned from vacationing in Jamaica. As guests of a young local couple whom they had met four years ago, they toured the island. They spent two or three days at the couple's condo in the city of Kingston, drove over the mountains to the opposite coast "to the country" to meet their mothers, then on to Montego Bay and the Sandals Resorts. They wanted to see and meet "the real people" of Jamaica. Despite the acknowledged poverty all about, "We were encouraged to find humble but comfortable homes," Polly said, "and a spirit of graciousness and friendliness wherever we traveled."

HAPPY 90TH

Please join us in wishing "Aunt Tootsie" a happy 90th birthday. Aunt Tootsie, also known as Charlotte Fratus, has lived in Cohasset all her life. As a matter of fact, she lives in the home she was born in. Happy Birthday, Aunt Tootsie from the Dicksons!

DEAN'S LIST

Congratulations go to Alexandra Creighton this week! Alexandra is a freshman at Ithaca College, and made the Dean's List with a grade point average of 3.85. She loves college life, and is obviously doing a fine job with her studies — everyone is proud of you, Alexandra!

COLLEGE GRADUATE

We are happy to hear that MaryLou Rosano of Hull Street, Cohasset, graduated Saturday, Jan. 9, from Quincy College. MaryLou earned an associate degree in Early Childhood. Her parents, Geraldina and Vito, and brother Frank are very proud of her, as are the rest of her family (including her grandmother, aunt, uncle and cousins who live in Italy). MaryLou has already found a part-time job; she is with Sandcastles Day Care in Cohasset; she also works at Stop and Shop in Cohasset, you have probably seen her countless times there! What a busy gal! Good luck in your future, Marylou, you surely have worked long and hard to make all of this possible! You are a wonder!

Dining in Kingston, Jamaica at beautiful Strawberry Hill, atop Blue Mountain, are (L-R) Polly and Tom Doggett of Cohasset, and friends, Andrew and Michele Ogeare.

NOBLES SPORTS NEWS

Noble and Greenough Headmaster Richard H. Baker and interim Athletic Director Doug Guyare announce that Mickey Palone (Class of 2001), son of Michael and Margaret Palone of Cohasset, has made the Varsity Boys' Basketball Team. The team began its season by winning the Rivers Holiday Tournament in December.

Making the roster for the Varsity Boys' Squash Team is Morgan Sandell (Class of 1999), son of Jim and Nancy Sandell of Cohasset.

And, Ted Lubitz (Class of 2001), son of Ed and Kyle Lubitz of Cohasset, and Elliot Noon (Class of 2000), son of Nick and Connie Noon from Cohasset, have made the varsity ski team.

We certainly have more than a lot of athletes from this small little town, don't we! Congratulations to all of you, hopefully you will all have winning seasons!

PRESIDENTIAL CLASSROOM

Speaking of a wonderful group of youngsters, how about Mike Baird, Megan Connolly and Stephen Reynolds — they will all be heading to the Presidential Classroom in Washington D.C. next month. They have been chosen by the high school administration to represent Cohasset at leadership conferences focusing on economics, international relations and domestic issues. The Student Council P.S.O, Cohasset Teachers Association, The Lightkeepers and several community members have generously shown their support for this program that benefits all the students. These very dedicated students have $1,900 left to raise to make their dream trip a reality. If you would like to make a donation, please send it to Mr. DeLorenzo at Cohasset High School. Mike, Megan and Stephen will be ever-so grateful to you — theses wonderful kiddos are a credit to their school and their community!

QUILT SHOW

Here is a date for all of you quilters to mark on your calendar — The Second Congregational Church of Cohasset is holding its sixth Annual Quilt Show/Luncheon March 6, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the church. They are looking for quilts to exhibit; if you are willing to share your work of art with all, give the church office a call (in the mornings) at 383-0345, before the deadline date of Feb. 12.

Concert at Temple Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St. in Hingham at 8 p.m. As we have written previously, there are 10 "Cohassetites" in the group — some highlights from the casual pops-style choral concert include selections from "Dames at Sea," "Music Man," as well as a variety of musicals from classical to barbershop and sing-alongs accompanied by a brass quartet. Original humorous musical numbers written specifically for the show will also be performed. Audience members are encouraged to bring picnic baskets filled with favorite foods and beverages to enjoy this lively and nostalgic show. MAY I PRESENT

Several years ago, we always looked forward to Super Bowl parties held at the home of Jack and Pat Karle — what fun they were, and what a presentation of food Pat always put on! Included in her menus were always two special desserts — they were complimented endlessly, pretty to look at and, most of all, delicious.

Pat always followed the "hostess guide" in serving the dessert — they were served attractively, small portions (with the invitation for seconds) so that they could be enjoyed without being too much the first time around; and, they were compatible with the rest of the meal.

Don't count the calories when eating these, be content to savor every bite and worry about the scale tomorrow!

PAT'S CHEESECAKE

Crust:

Combine 26 graham crackers, rolled fine, 3/4 cup melted butter and one tablespoon brown sugar. Line the bottom of a 9-inch spring form pan with this mixture. For the filling: combine and beat at medium speed for 20-25 minutes 24 ounces cream cheese, 4 eggs, 1 cup sugar and one teaspoon vanilla. Place cheese mixture in spring form; bake at 325 degrees for 40 minutes. Cool for 35 minutes. While cooling, beat together for 10 minutes one pint sour cream and 3/4 cup sugar. Pour over top of baked cake. Bake at 400 degrees for 10 minutes. Watch carefully! It should brown very slightly on top. Refrigerate at least overnight.

DOUBLE CHOCOLATE PIE

Mix together 1-1/4 cups chocolate wafer crumbs, 1/4 cup sugar and 1/3 cup melted butter. Press into bottom and sides of a 10-inch pie plate. Bake at 400 degrees for 5 minutes. Chill. Filling: Melt in top of double boiler one 6-ounce package chocolate bits. Remove from heat and beat in one egg, two egg yolks, and 1-1/2 tsp. dark rum. Fold in 2 egg whites, stiffly beaten and one cup whipped cream.

Fill pie shell. Refrigerate. When ready to serve, top with whipped cream, 1/2 square bitter chocolate, shaved.

Fishing for a solution

It was good to see so many turn out for Sunday's fishermen's rally at the Scituate Town Pier to show support for the men and women who make their living at sea. That living is in jeopardy this winter, as a federal cod ban which began this week has grounded dozens of local fishermen.

This fish story is one that is close to all of us. Drive away from the harbors and it's easy to forget that our suburban communities are also a real, working fishing villages — that those boats that move in and out of the harbor on blustery winter days while we eat our clam chowder inside the Mill Wharf or Kimballs by the Sea are manned by real live fishermen, who depend on their daily catch to make ends meet. They did not step off a box of Gortons fish sticks, they are our friends and neighbors.

For so many of them, fishing is in the family. It is a tradition that has been handed down from generation to generation and while it is hard, dangerous and often solitary work, it is a career that they are reluctant, despite the obstacles facing them, to walk away from. More than 100 local residents put food on their tables by braving the best and the worst that the North Atlantic can dish out, either part-time or year-round. While winter weather is often the most fierce and hazardous, it is the time that most local fishermen look forward to, as cod prices run high.

But this year will be different. Despite their decision to band together and hire a Washington DC attorney to help them fight the ban, the fishermen will likely lose this profitable season altogether. That could add up to a 50 percent loss in annual income, according to James Keding, president of Marshfield's Commercial Fishermen's Association. And word of further restrictions on ground fishing threatens to make the coming spring season equally dismal.

And it's not just the out-of-business fishermen who will feel the crunch. So too, will local merchants who rely on the industry for their business. While the fishermen and the scientists remain at odds over whether fish populations are indeed waning, an entire way of life for hundreds of local fisherman is endangered. So too, is an enormous part of our local heritage and history — a part of Scituate's and Cohasset's identity. Their loss would be our loss as well.

There must be a way to strike a balance to save both the fish and the fishermen who bring them to our restaurants, our grocery stores and our tables. Without some compromise more and more mariners unable to fish will be forced to cut bait.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Full text of tri-town letter

Robert A. Durand, Secretary
Executive Office of Environmental Affairs

Dear Secretary Durand:

The Selectmen from the towns of Scituate, Hingham and Cohasset are joining to write this letter to you regarding the inadequacy of the MBTA's environmental analysis for proposed transportation improvements in the Greenbush corridor.

Our Boards met for the first time in July of 1998 to review our mutual experiences in dealing with the MBTA and our growing concern about the potential adverse impacts of diesel rail through our communities.

We have concluded that the MBTA's Supplemental Draft Environmental Impact Report contains serious unresolved conflicts between the data and conclusions. Each town, independently, either by itself or with outside engineering and technical assistance, reviewed the MBTA's SDEIR and subsequent reports, comparing those data with other readily available information.

Many unresolved conflicts were found. These conflicts relate to such items as the MBTA's analysis of air pollution, noise and vibration associated with the rail alternative, and safety issues related to 43 grade crossings in 17 miles.

These concerns, and others, have been echoed by various state and federal agencies which have also questioned the MBTA ridership assumptions as well as the accuracy and completeness of studies designed to gauge the potential impact of rail on wetlands and abutting neighborhoods.

These conflicts are particularly troubling in light of the specific charges your predecessor, Trudy Coxe, made in her Certificate dated June 1, 1995. Without good data, there is no way that either we or the MBTA can properly evaluate the impacts of the proposed project, or of any project alternatives, on our communities.

Since the original SDEIR was produced, nearly five years ago, the body of technical knowledge on which the MBTA's analyses are based, has changed. Federal agencies have adopted, or are considering the adoption of, new regulations to deal with train-related safety and health issues, including diesel emissions. User demographics and habits have also changed.

It is our joint opinion that the conflicting analyses and data, along with the import of new developments, MUST be resolved before we can determine all impacts on our coastal towns. To this end, we ask you to require a new, properly scoped, SDEIR.

Since this is a matter of urgent concern to our communities, we would appreciate the opportunity to meet with you at your earliest convenience.

Respectfully yours,
Boards of Selectmen

Will of the voters

TO THE EDITOR:

I was outraged to read in the Jan. 28 Mariner that Selectman Tom Callahan wants to use his board's authority to implement the buck-a-bag garbage disposal program without town meeting approval. The duty of elected officials is to represent the will of the voters who elected them, and Mr. Callahan's attitude is clearly contrary to that. This issue was presented, debated and defeated at the Spring of 1998 Town Meeting.

The selectmen set a dangerous precedent in using their power to go against the wishes of the majority. All elected officials should be reminded that they are not voted into office so that they can further their own agenda.

McNabb clarifies water salt level

By John McNabb
WATER COMMISSIONER

Clarification is needed regarding the Board of Health's statement in the Jan. 28, Cohasset Mariner Health Notes column, where the Board of Health said that:

"Cohasset's drinking water supply contains about 25 milligrams per liter of salt. This is a relatively high level and it is rising."

While this statement clearly implies that Cohasset's drinking water has a high level of salt in it, and this level is rising, this is NOT the case.

1. The 25 milligrams per liter level apparently came from sampling of Lily Pond or Peppermint Brook, a tributary to Lily Pond, and NOT the finished water that leaves the treatment plant and which is actually consumed. I am not aware that the Water Commission has seen such sampling results that show the reported level of 25 mg/L or the other results which show that this level is "rising" — please provide those results to the Water Commission.

2. The results for finished water, the water that people actually drink, is very different. As the enclosed chart shows, the current level, as sampled in June 1998, is 16 mg/L for sodium in finished water, and that this level has been falling (not rising) since 1996, when the level was 27 mg/L and 1997 when it was 20.1 mg/L. So, if sodium in drinking water is a health concern, the fact is that the consumers of such water should be told not that the levels of sodium are rising, which is not true, but that they are low and have been falling.

The fact of the matter is that sodium is not considered to be a contaminant in drinking water and the levels in drinking water are not regulated.

3. Is sodium a public health concern? The Board of Health article is entitled "Health and Road Salt," but does not discuss why salt should be considered a health concern or why 25 mg/L should be considered a "relatively high" level. The fact of the matter is that sodium is NOT considered to be a contaminant in drinking water and the levels in drinking water are not regulated. The only requirements under state and EPA water quality regulations are that any level of sodium be reported to the DEP when the required annual test is made. While the EPA and the state have a "guideline" of 20 mg/L for sodium in drinking water, there is no violation for exceeding that guideline and no requirements for a water provider to take any action to reduce that level if 20 mg/L is exceeded.

4. Sodium is not considered a health threat by the EPA. as you can see in the enclosed EPA publication, "Sodium in Drinking Water," the EPA believes that the 20 mg/L level "needs updating and is probably low. If a health benchmark for drinking water were established using current information and current drinking water health assessment procedures, it would likely be higher." The EPA also points out that "Sodium levels in drinking water from most public water systems are unlikely to be a significant contribution to adverse health effects."

HEALTH NOTES

Simple rules to avoid food-borne illnesses

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

The news has been filled with reports of enormous recalls of food, mainly hamburger. The staggering amounts beg reason. Surely, enough food is destroyed in this country to wipe out starvation in many third world countries. The problem is that the ten worst food-borne pathogens, (see list) have mostly the same symptoms and avoiding them is pathetically simple: follow the 3 C's and an S:

• Clean: Keep utensils and food clean, wash often; use good hygiene

•Chill: Keep foods at 40 degrees or below, and chill as soon as possible.

• Separate: Don't let juices from raw meat come in contact with other foods, enclose packages, use different utensils and platters to cook and serve foods.

The solutions are simple, and will save quantities of food, not to mention considerable discomfort and illness. Of the ten common pathogens listed, several have only been discovered recently, and there is evidence that they are mutating to become more resistant to modern medical treatment.

The Ten Least Wanted:

A partial list of symptoms and carriers

Campylobacter jejuni — diarrhea & Guillain Barre Syndrome — raw poultry, meat and milk.

Clostridium perfringens — colic, nausea — poorly cooked meat; beef, birds, pork.

E.coli 0157:H7 bloody diarrhea — uncooked meat, unpasturized apple juice.

Listeria monocytogenes — illness to weakened babies and elders — uncooked meat.

Salmonella — headache vomiting, diarrhea — raw undercooked eggs, meat, seafood.

Staphylococcus aureus — infection — ham, raw meats, salads, unwashed hands.

Shigella — dysentery — salads, drinking water, dairy products.

Toxoplasma gondi parasite causes fever – pork.

Vibro vulnificus gastroenteritis – seafood.

Yersinia enterocolitica – diarrhea – pork.

Our Water Supply

In the last Health Notes, this column stated that the salt content of our water supply was about 25 milligrams per liter (mg/L) and increasing. The statement referred to the condition of Lily Pond around Peppermint brook, one of the trouble areas for that body of water. Although this part of Lily Pond remains a problem, it should be noted that the treated water coming from the water works now has salt levels below 15 mg/L and this value has been going down for three years. The Board of Health receives periodic reports on the quality and purity of our drinking water and it continues to remain safe and pure. Pond water usually has a distinctive taste, and Lily Pond is no exception. Also, sometimes, the water in the pipes exhibits some color. This does not reveal an unsafe condition. Cohasset continues to have safe pure drinkable water, if sometimes somewhat colorful.

Downfall of yet another legitimate word

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Fran Rosa, the retired Boston Globe hockey writer, once told me this story.

The Boston Bruins were playing the Montreal Canadiens in a playoff series. Canadiens were winning, largely because of the play of three defensemen, Larry Robinson, Guy Lapointe and Serge Savard.

Clearly, something had to be done to neutralize the trio and Fran wrote about it in his daily story, on which someone else added the headline, "Bruins seek chink in Montreal defense."

"Chink," in this case, meaning "a weak spot that may leave one vulnerable."

But the Globe got a couple of letters from readers, said Fran, castigating him for using the racist word "chink" and reminding him huffily that the proper and politically correct term was "Chinese."

I thought of that the other day when I saw what happened to David White down in Washington, a city where a mayor (Marion Barry Jr.) once was caught in a drug bust. wound up in jail and still was reelected to another term.

David, a white city employee, was addressing a meeting about a fund he was administering when he unwittingly described the government's financial contributions to his office as "niggardly."

He was forced to submit his resignations and it was accepted by Mayor Anthony Williams, who apparently never opened a dictionary or he would have learned that the word means, according to Webster, "grudgingly mean about spending or granting."

(When was the last time that was said about the government?)

Niggardly has no relation whatsoever to that other word, the one that is banned from newspapers and magazines everywhere, even those publications that have liberated four-letter Anglo-Saxon functional verbs.

Have we reached that point in sensitivity to each other's feelings that we have to give new meanings to old words (at least 300 years old in the case of niggardly) in order to create new racial and other slurs?

The word "gay" — the one that means "happily excited (and) keenly alive and exuberant" according to Webster — has been all but eliminated from the English language in the past 50 years. Now it describes a homosexual.

The root of the English word "gay" is apparently an Old French word, "gai," meaning "happy."

If you call most straights "gay" these days it'll get you a punch in the nose or at least yelled at, even though he (the straight) may be both "happy" and "keenly alive and exuberant."

Another word that has been lost to political correctness is "warrior," which has been stigmatized by the Indians, or Native Americans, as demeaning to their ancestors when used as a sports nickname.

My copy of "The Dictionary of Word Origins" says that it derives from the Old Northern French word "werreieor," loosely translated as one who makes werre, or war. So the Gauls (or Native Frenchmen) have more to complain about than the Indians.

If we're lucky, "niggardly" won't join "chink," "gay," and "warrior" in the rapidly expanding list of legitimate words that have been lost for illegitimate reasons.

McElroy resigns from school committee

Had one year left on term

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Joseph McElroy has officially resigned from his post on the school committee, leaving that position open for others who might wish to run.

In a resignation statement dated Feb. 1, McElroy outlined the following reasons for giving up his seat: feeling he had not contributed sufficiently to the improvement of issues that he had campaigned on, such as better budgeting and strategic planning; his sense that his nature might be too "impatient" for elective office and, "like fine wine, might need to age a little more"; and lastly, he explained that he felt uncomfortable representing parents and taxpayers on the school committee because his daughter may attend a parochial school next year.

"I'm going to miss working with Joe," Patricia Martin, school committee member, said this week. "You couldn't find a more dedicated man. He brought a lot of energy to the committee and I enjoyed working with him. I know that Joe, along with his energy, enthusiasm and dedication, will be missed."

McElroy's resignation comes as a shock to committee members, who only learned that chairman Rick Shea would not seek re-election a few weeks ago after serving only one term.. McElroy still had a year left of his three-year term.

"It was somewhat of a surprise.," said Shea. "Joe made some references to some personal matters that may affect his ability to continue on the school committee, but it certainly came more quickly than it was expected."

Selectmen Merle Brown informed McElroy at last week's school committee meeting that he had to make his resignation effective immediately in order to give the opportunity for others to submit papers to run for his seat.

"I'm going to miss working with Joe. You couldn't find a more dedicated man. He brought a lot of energy to the committee and I enjoyed working with him."

— Patricia Martin, school committee member

"People can take out papers for the balance of the term, which is one year, and then it would not be a three-year term, but a one-year term," said McElroy.

Selectmen made a formal announcement of McElroy's resignation at their meeting Tuesday night.

McElroy, a 15-year resident of Cohasset, said that he had run for office because he wanted all students to have the best possible opportunity for a quality public education and because he wanted to help heal the rifts that had arisen within the Cohasset community over the new Joseph Osgood Elementary School.

His stated intention when elected was to give special emphasis to integrating five-year strategic and financial plans, to promote a better understanding of school and community priorities and to put technology on the fast track for the schools, while also emphasizing core basic studies.

In his resignation statement, McElroy said that while there may have been mitigating circumstances during his term, he feels that elected officials are accountable to deliver and he had not.

Shea would disagree.

"The types of things Joe concerned himself with were the management operations of the school's management department and the school committee itself," said Shea. "Joe has been a strong advocate of implementing good management practices, good operating policies and procedures and trying to assist the school department to operate on a business-like basis and I think that's what he's been mostly concerned with. I think he's also been an advocate for fully funding the requirements of Educational Reform and also meeting school department's requirements under SPED.

" I think Joe has brought a lot of energy and enthusiasm, and has been a tireless worker who devoted much of his time to try to make improvements in policies and procedures," Shea added. "He had good contacts with other town boards who could help us. He was able to be an advocate for the schools with the selectmen and advisory committees."

At the last meeting, McElroy outlined reasons why the Cohasset school district needed to be funded at approximately 115 percent of the Massachusetts cost per student average. He explained that the schools are now averaging at about 107 percent and that the budget would have to increase at an annualized rate of 10 percent for the next three-to-five years to keep up with costs.

McElroy also included the following in factors causing the budget overload: SPED students, including early intervention cases; growing enrollment; deferred funding for infrastructure; Education Reform Act mandates including increased teacher-student contact hours, increased administrative requirements, MCAS remediation, state assistance funneled to less affluent school districts; creation of a technology support base; an increasing need for teacher professional development; higher overhead costs implicit in operating a small school district; higher operating/overhead costs associated with the new Osgood school; greater commitment to Middle-High School level two students; major facility renovations needed for Deer Hill and Middle-High School; a weak-budget formulation and management process; and the failure of the school committee, staff and faculty to accept that a small school district cannot accommodate all desirable electives and extra-curricular programs.

McElroy suggested that the school committee begin holding public forums to inform the electorate of the challenges ahead.

"We still have a lot to accomplish," said Shea. "Certainly, I like to come up with a budget that can meet the educational requirements or the basic educational requirements as we see them, but at the same time, we're trying to be sensitive to the impact on the amount of the override, the effect on the tax rate."

The impact on less affluent taxpayers is something that McElroy had alluded to at an informal meeting with selectmen two weeks ago.

"I said then that we'd crossed a Rubicon," said McElroy. "You only can mismanage locally and endure state unfunded mandates to the extent that we have with state moneys going to the poorer districts—which I understand why that is—for so long and then the DPW garages, water district, new schools and sewage systems all need to be done at once and then you've crossed the Rubicon. The balance of political power in Cohasset has shifted to double-income, high income evolution into Boston's bedroom community. It's always been that in the past 30 years to some extent, but with each new conversion of a new home to a million or half-million dollar home, each new development, the diversity has been waning for a decade or more at a rapid pace and we've crossed the Rubicon."

While McElroy has stepped down, it would be unlikely that the retired lieutenant colonel who has served on the town's capital budget committee, as a director of the Cohasset Historical Society, was chairperson of a South Shore Alzheimer's telethon and is past president of the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation will remain out of public affairs for long.

"My resigning from a term probably doesn't sit well with some people, even those who have been supportive of me," said McElroy. "But I do intend to remain committed to Cohasset and to speak out on a variety of issues—the schools included. You never say never, so that's certainly not in the near future."

Nomination papers for the Annual Town Election on April 10 are available at the Town Clerk's Office. Interested parties must be a registered voter to run. Papers can be taken as late as Feb. 18 and must be returned Mon., Feb. 22.

Rain washes away all that Cohasset snow

Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Last Friday morning's snow meant an extra cup of coffee for parents and some dawdling over corn flakes for students, thanks to the seven inches of wintry white stuff that blanketed Cohasset and delayed school by two hours.

School children can thank (or denounce) department of public works superintendent Harold Litchfield for keeping his men on the job for 15 hours to make sure that the roads were clear and the school sidewalks and driveways were salted and sanded in time to prevent a school closing.

That busy schedule, along with 80 tons of salt and 160 tons of sand is what it took to keep Cohasset's roads and school sidewalks safe for drivers and pedestrians.

"I had 14 men on the road from the DPW, but I contract out for plowing," Litchfield said. "We had three big trucks and four four-wheel drives to handle private ways."

Johnny Ryan gets a little help as he prepares to head down the hill.

Main roads are the DPW's priority, followed by the schools, which need to be made safe no later than two hours after their usual opening times.

The 37 miles of accepted roads and 11 miles of private ways in town ate up most of the DPW's sand and salt stock.

"We just hauled in another 120 tons of salt and 160 tons of sand," Litchfield said, Tuesday. "We replenished the salt today and the sand yesterday."

Luckily, the storm took a detour just as the sand supply ran out.

"We were totally out of sand," Litchfield said. "In fact, we weren't going to do too much sanding after a point because we were running low and delivery wasn't until Monday."

Cohasset Hardware ran low on some snow-related items, too.

"We sold out on our large bags of ice melt last week," said Phil Rose, store manager. "People come in for shovels and that sort of thing during a storm, kind of like they didn't expect it to snow. We sell a lot of ice melt, bu[illegible] I've got some more. We're ready."

Ready or not, there may be another storm on the horizon.

Bob Skilling, weather observer at Blue Hills Observatory, said that the seven inches of snow that fell on Cohasset doesn't cancel out the overall mild average temperatures for this winter, but that the Groundhog Punxsutawney Phil's failure to see his shadow could signal an early spring.

"He didn't see his shadow and so, unscientifically speaking, that means a mild six weeks of winter ahead," said Skilling. "But who knows? Maybe the end of winter will bring a bigger snow storm."

Tumblers set to flip at All-Star meet

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

You can officially stamp the Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics season a success, regardless of how well CN does in the invitational events.

Heading into this week, CN was holding down a 6-4 overall record and 5-4 within the Pilgrim Conference. Ruthann Ardizzoni's squad was busy prepping for Monday's final meet against the on-again, off-again Hingham High team. CN edged out the Harbormen the first time around, but Ardizzoni said any one of a number of variables could be in the mix for Hingham. A win for CN would have been good for third place in the league with fourth already clinched.

"They very much want to beat Hingham," Ardizzoni said Sunday. "If they (Harbormen) are all there, they should win the meet. Hingham has been scoring 114 to 121. We're working toward a 119 plus."

CN didn't reach the 119 goal against Hanover, but did record a solid 117.75 in a tough Jan. 27 loss to the Indians. Hanover came away with 118.3 points in what was probably the most disappointing of the season for CN.

"I think Hanover thought this would be an easy win for them," Ardizzoni said. "It was a good meet, but it was a little disappointing. I think they were disappointed because they believed they performed better than their scores indicated."

Kristen Sheerin continued to build momentum toward Thursday's All-League meet, winning the beam and floor events while taking seconds on the vault and all-around. Sheerin scored a 7.85 on beam, 8.1 on vault and a very strong 8.4 on floor to edge out teammate Tara Hettstrom's 8.35.

Hettstrom was second on bars (7.55) and third on both the floor (7.95) and all-around. Carlie Carter picked up thirds on bars (7.4) and beam (7.6).

CN had to do without the services of Norwell's top gymnast, Pattie LaCroix, who was resting a slight foot injury. Beth Jackson continued to perform well on the vault and bars with Julie Callahan and Alison Duffney also contributing.

Cohasset's middle-schoolers Shelley Carter and Katie Portanova competed and should be ready to be in the scoring hunt in the next two years. For now, the experience is proving to be invaluable.

"We're looking forward to them performing," Ardizzoni said. "It's a great experience for them. They're learning a lot about gymnastics and training."

CN didn't dwell on its tough loss, coming back the following evening to sweep first place in every event in a 117.8-108.2 pasting of Carver.

Carter and Sheerin tied for first on bars with an 8.1 and Hettstrom continued to improve on her scores with a 7.6 for third. "Tara's really improving on the bars late in the season," Ardizzoni said. "She has gone from the high 6's and low 7's to the high 7's."

Sheerin (7.7) led Lauren Genovese (7.4) and Hettstrom (7.3) in a sweep on the beam. Sheerin took the vault in 8.2 with Carter rallying for a 7.2, third-place finish. The pair took the same places in the all-around in 32.5 and 30.5, respectively, after Sheerin (8.5) led a fine 1-2 performance with Hettstrom (8.2) on the floor exercise.

A title is in sight

If everything goes to plan, the CHS wrestling team should be basking in the glory of a South Shore League title as you read this newspaper with your coffee on Thursday morning.

After finally breaking the curse of the Carver Crusaders last month and taking top honors at their own tourney, a win Wednesday night at home against Norwell would clinch at least a share of the SSL for the grapplers.

"It's an exciting time to be this close to our first ever league title," said head coach Torin Sweeney.

But, he added, nothing is in the bag quite yet.

"Norwell has got a very solid team and we might have to go into the meet without one of our better wrestlers, so we've got to be ready to give it a great effort," said Sweeney. "If things go our way, we should be able to walk away with a big win. But if they go against us, Norwell could very easily do the same.

"It's going to be a fun night."

The Skippers are a perfect 4-0 in the league (12-1 overall) so far including a huge win over perennial league champ Carver, a school that has dominated the league for the past decade. Carver is right behind the Skippers at 15-3-1, 3-1-0 in SSL meets.

A perfect regular season for the Skippers went by the boards over the weekend when they dropped a 33-16 decision to Wayland, their first such loss of the year.

It was not all bad news for Cohas-

Swimmers handle some rough seas

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Everything you could expect has been thrown against the CHS swimming team this season, but somehow they seem to stay afloat.

They lost their top performer from last year, Greg Bilton, to graduation and Brown University.

They only had 11 kids come out for the team, but of those only seven are actually able to score points for the squad because the others are middle school students.

To top it all off, the team never really gets to have the all-important home court advantage since all of their home meets are held are held at the pool at Randolph High School.

But through it all the team has stayed afloat, picking up a team win over Quincy earlier in the year.

"Having such a small squad puts us in a tough situation," admits head coach Gary McKinnon. "Our younger kids have been swimming very well, but no matter how well they do we can't use their efforts towards team points. It's a good experience for them to be swimming for the team now and it should help them mature for future years."

One such team member in that situation is middle school student David Crowley-Buck, whose exhibition scores in the diving events constantly place him near the top of the competition.

"He's a tremendous talent as a diver, but he's only in the eighth grade," said McKinnon. "David will be a big help to the team next season when we will be able to use his points."

Because the Skippers are such a small team they are allowed to compete with both boys and girls on the squad. In general, said McKinnon, the group has been strongest in the relays and the shorter sprints.

Tennis player Kate Stone has been one of the standouts this season and she has been joined in the pool by her sister, Kelly Stone.

Also in the swim of things have been Maura Duffy, Jen Mehan, Kt-- Foley, Chris Golden and Kate Grim.

The swimmers are currently preparing for the Pilgrim Conference finals, which begin next Thursday (Feb. 11) at the Percy Walker Pool in Duxbury.

Snow Row is set for March 6

The Snow Row has gained a well-deserved reputation as Hull Lifesaving Museum's signature race. They've had snow squalls and shirtsleeves, and everything in between on race day, but nothing tempers the excitement of this hard-working winter event or the enthusiasm of the athletes.

Last year's event hosted a record 200 participants and 2,000 spectators lining the beach at Hull Gut. The race starts with all boats on the beach at the museum's Windmill Point Boathouse, in Hull. Then, at the shot of the starting gun, the competitors race into their boats LeMans style, creating a whirlwind of disorganized havoc ashore and afloat.

The 3 3/4-mile triangular course starts through Hull and Hingham Bays, continues around Sheep Island, past the Peddocks Island Day marker, and back to the beach.

The whole event is within view of the boathouse, so this is a particularly good event for spectators. It is also a rare opportunity to see a stunning array of wooden pulling boats on the beach and in action — peapods, dories, wherries, whitehalls, ocean shells, pilot gigs, captain's gigs, and Irish curraghs.

The race has five boat categories, workboats, livery boats, coxed boats, ocean kayaks and ocean shells. A few notes to all race participants: 1) All racers must be members of the USRA or the HLMI Rowing Association. 2) All boats must carry PFD's, bailers and whistles. 3) All coxed boats must begin the race bow on the beach. And 4) The HLMI Race Committee reserves the right to cancel the race or keep individual boats from setting forth due to weather conditions or rower skill level.

After watching the excitement of the Snow Row, the museum, one mile down the beach, will be open with free admission for all.

For more information about the Snow Row, call Ed McCabe at 925-5433 or Box 221, Hull, MA 02045.

BSC's annual pitching and hitting clinic

The Bridgewater State College baseball team will hold its 11th annual pitching and hitting clinic from Saturday to Monday, Feb. 13 to 15. The clinic will be divided into two groups that participate in a two-hour session each of the three days.

The clinic director is BSC head baseball coach Rick Smith, who is now in his sixth season as head coach for the Bears. He was a fifth round draft choice of the St. Louis Cardinals in 1973.

The BSC pitching and hitting clinic is open to all boys between the ages of 8-18. Participants will be grouped by age and/or skill level. Both individual and team instruction will be given for offensive and defensive skills. An abundance of drills and station work will be used to develop the "all around" baseball player.

Special guests at the three-day clinic include former minor league stars Paul Rappoli and John Graham. Graham is currently an assistant coach for the Bridgewater State College baseball program.

The clinic fee is $75. To receive a clinic brochure and an application with further information regarding the clinic, call the Bridgewater State College athletic office at (508) 697-1352.

Free sports websites available

The Cohasset Mariner and Town Online, the online service of the Community Newspaper Company (CNC), are offering free web sites to all high school, youth and recreation sports organizations and teams.

CNC will provide the web site and train organization representatives in web page design and building, using self-publishing internet software that is acessible from any computer. Most people only need one 2 1/2-hour training session to get the hang of it. There are no hidden fees and no catches.

Each group and team will build and maintain its own site. Post game results, schedules, a calendar of events, bulletin board, lists of officials and team rosters, photos and/or directions to fields. Coming very soon - each group will have the capability of holding its own online chats.

This is a great way for sports teams and organizations to get their results and message to the public using the web through Town Online.

The program is available to all youth, adult, recreational and high school sports teams and organizations. Even groups who already have websites are invited to join in and be a part of a growing web network that receives over 1.5 million hits a month...and growing.

For more information on this exciting new program, contact Wayne Braverman at (781) 433-7842, or email wbraverman@cnc.com.

Fitness center available at CHS

Through the auspices of Cohasset High School and Dr. Mike Gill of the Health Education Department; CHS has a commercial quality fitness center.

CHS is interested in making this facility available to all residents at a nominal fee charge which cannot be determined until we have an idea of how many residents might have interest utilizing the facility. If you feel that you or members of your family might be interested in using the CHS gym, please call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-4109 right away.

The Rec. Dept. would like to know approximately how many residents would utilize the facility if they were able to keep it open during evening and weekend hours.

The facility includes about $75,000 worth of equipment consisting of a variety strength building equipment, two treadmills, two stairmasters, five stationary bikes and a stairmaster free-runner all of commercial quality.

The nominal fee charge would be employed to provide supervision during hours of operation, as well as revenue dedicated towards maintenance and upkeep of the equipment

The fitness center, located in the old study hall room, is currently utilized by students and staff and by CHS gym classes. Ideally, this unique opportunity could be made available to all residents outside of school hours. You may call 383-4109, 24 hours a day and if you receive voice-mail, please leave the number of people in your family who might utilize this facility if a nominal fee were charged and the facility open evenings/weekends.

Crew makes their debut

This year Cohasset girls soccer didn't go into winter hibernation, but continues weekly through the winter indoors at the Hingham Sports Arena.

Eighteen girls, age 13 to 16, recently formed a new team called the Cohasset Crew.

Coached by Jamie Ross, and managed by Kathy O'Neill and Debbie Shadd, the season is off to a fun start. Learning from their first game loss to Braintree 0-7, the Crew followed this week with a resounding win over set as they beat Durfee 51-20 and a powerhouse Whitman-Hanson squad, 37-32 at the quad meet.

Weymouth, 17-0.

"Wayland is a team we'll see again in the state tourney," said Sweeney. "They are the top team in Division 3 right now and should be our toughest competition."

Mike Rossi and J.P. Laugelle were triple winners for the Skippers.

Against Wayland the Skippers lost six matches by three points or less, staying competitive at all weight levels but only coming away with five of the 14 classes.

The Skippers split the matches down the middle with the Panthers, but were able to come away with the win because they had more victories via pinfall.

"Overall it was a very good day for us," said Sweeney of the Wayland meet. "Now we know what we can expect from them when the tourney comes around. We've got some work ahead of us."

Icemen slowly making their way back

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

Several private school hockey players could prove the difference whether or not the rebuilding Cohasset High hockey team joins the Pilgrim Conference or continues as an independent next year.

According to coach Dennis Walsh, the Skippers are at least one or two players away from where he thinks they should be before playing a regular league schedule.

Cohasset, which returned to playing some varsity hockey games this season following a season of just playing freshman and junior varsity hockey, has come a long way, but not quite far enough, according to the coach.

When asked if his team would be ready to rejoin league play next year Coach Walsh answered, "We're making progress and we plan to play some hockey when the season is over. But the way matters stand now, I would have to say no.

"However, we're just a couple of players away, and there's some private school players in the town who may just be enrolling at Cohasset High next year.

"There have been rumors that at least two private school players could be at Cohasset High next year. There's an outside chance that if we get real lucky, we may get three or four.

"A lot depends on whether or not the transfer students come here. We were a little lucky this year with some freshmen players who made a tremendous difference in the growth of this young team. "A couple of transfers and we could put a formidable team on the ice."

As it turns out, Rockland High's hockey team is currently experiencing such a situation. The McElanney brothers, Sean and Al transferred to Rockland and have put a lot of zip into the team. They had been playing at Xaverian High.

Al, a junior, is playing on the first line and had himself a hat trick against Hull recently, while Sean, a sophomore, has been playing great defense.

Steve Mikkanen leads the rush for the CHS hockey squad.

With the two transfers making a big difference on the team, Rockland now has a good chance of making the tournament this season.

Coach Walsh added, "We keep getting better as the kids gain experience. They're starting to hold their own against varsity teams. We recently played Hull and the kids really played well, but finally ran out of gas and Hull scored three quick goals on us.

"We played Cape Cod Tech with three players out with injuries and we played them real tough. We're just a couple of players away."

One of the freshman players who has been doing well for Cohasset is goalie Chris Caron. "He's been coming along very well," said the coach.

Another freshman who has been getting a lot of playing time is Will Pendergast. "He has plenty of potential," noted the coach, "And he is beginning to show it.

"Players like Caron and Pendergast are forming the nucleus of this club."

The team suffered a blow when one of its top sophomore players, Ken Portanova suffered a broken collarbone. Obviously, he's out for the remainder of the season, but he is one of the players Coach Walsh will be counting on next season.

With no games played last week, Cohasset has five games remaining on its schedule. This week the Skippers are taking on the Hanover High junior varsity team, followed by South Boston varsity and Hull varsity.

The Skippers will close out next week against Norwell and Abington.

Among Cohasset's victories this season was a nice win against the Avon High varsity and a victory over Rockland's junior varsity.

It's a wait and see game for Coach Walsh as he tries to make a decision about joining league play next season. A lot will depend on off-season hockey and the potential private school transfers.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Heading to Washington, D.C.

Mike Baird, Megan Connolly and Stephen Reynolds will be heading the "Presidential Classroom" in Washington, D.C. next month. They have been chosen by the high school administration to represent Cohasset at leadership conferences focusing on economics, international relations and domestic issues. The rotary, student council, P.S.O., Cohasset teachers, the Lightkeepers and several community members have generously shown their support for this program that benefits all the students. These very dedicated students have $1,300 left to raise. If you would like to make a donation please make your check out to Cohasset High School and send it to Mr. Delorenzo at Cohasset High School, 55 Pond St.

People's choice awards

In order to enhance the beauty of the halls at Cohasset Middle/High School and give the students a sense of participation in the long-term design of the halls of the school, many students have already worked to paint murals in the hallways of the school. The new "gallery" in the art classroom area gives the students another avenue for expression.

Building on those opportunities for students to contribute to the long-term beauty of the building, and be recognized for their efforts, Ripley librarian Joan Gallagher and Mary DeLeon of the art department are organizing the People's Choice Art Award.

All students from grades 7-12 are invited to enter their creative efforts in the People's Choice Art Award. Work can be in any media and can be produced in class or independently. All entries must be submitted by Monday, Feb. 8; voting for the People's Choice will take place Wednesday, Feb. 10. All students, staff and visiting parents may vote on the day. Winners will be announced Feb. 9.

There will be two categories — grades 7-9 and 10-12. Prize winners will receive a cash stipend for their work which will be professionally prepared and placed on permanent display near the Ripley and art classrooms.

"It is our hope," said media specialist Gallagher, "that this will become an annual event that will both encourage students to further express themselves while enhancing the school environment."

Recording of Pope's visit on the web

There is such a demand worldwide for the historic album of Pope John Paul II's visit to Boston Oct. 1, 1979, that the producer and copyright owner Rik Tinory of Cohasset will include and link the album/turned C.D. to numerous Web Sites and offer it for sale.

The album, which was recorded and produced by Tinory, was a multitudinous welcome in this most jubilant of gatherings in 350-year-old historic Boston as the Pope himself described as, "The Gateway to America."

The recording session on Boston Common, Oct. 1, 1979, was the largest on location live recording in the history of recording, with more than 950,000 people attending the mammoth gathering, Tinory said.

Lifesaving Museum rowers appear on PBS documentary

On a beautiful night in April 1998, 25 members of the Hull Lifesaving Museum's Maritime Program participated in the filming of the upcoming PBS documentary, "Saved By Wireless," for the acclaimed series "The American Experience." Filmed by Ben Loderman Productions, in a segment that required the creation of dense rain and fog on an otherwise crystalline night, museum crews, costumed wig to boot in turn-of-the-century attire, pulled two surf-boats through Hull Gut again and again to recreate the historic first successful sea rescue using the Marconi wireless radio. The rowing boats used in the program, two actual 1930s era Beebe-McLelland surfboats, both reside in Cohasset Harbor. One is owned by local artisan Mike McNabb of Cohasset, the other, the John Warren II, is the centerpiece of the youth-focused on-the-water education programs of the Cohasset Maritime Institute (CMI). The town of Hull's Fire Department also pitched in, throwing veils of water high over Hull Gut to recreate the driving rainstorm during the rescue. The hour-long documentary tells the story of the 1909 shipwreck during which the White Star Line's Republic, a cruise ship, and the Lloyd Italiano's Florida, carrying European immigrants, collided off the coast of Nantucket, leading to one of the largest sea rescues in history.

ART NOTES

South Shore Art Center activities

GALLERIES

Upcoming exhibitions are in the Bancroft Gallery, "White, Black and Shades of Gray"; in the Dillon, "Multi-Media/Multi-Color"; and in the Manning Lobby, "Faculty Feature: Qingxiong Ma." An opening reception will be held Friday, Feb. 12, from 6 to 8 p.m.

WORKSHOPS FOR ADULTS

The art center is offering two workshops for adults in the spirit of Valentine's Day. In Cupid's Cards, participants will make one-of-a-kind works of art. Using handmade paper, ribbons, stamps, drawings, photos and other materials students will construct, sew, create and fashion unique cards. (Saturday, Feb. 6, 12:30 to 3:30 p.m., $45 members, $55 non-members.)

Ten other workshops are available including Your Home, Your Castle, create your own house portrait or design your dream home by learning to observe and draw architectural details using the medium of your choice (Thursdays, Feb. 25 to March 18, 9:30 to 12:30 p.m., $65 members, $75 non-members). To register or for a complete brochure call (781) 383-ARTS. The art center is located at 119 Ripley Rd. in Cohasset.

WORKSHOPS AND VACATION CAMP

The art center is offering a children's workshop for Valentine's Day. In Be My Valentine students in grades 1-3 or 4-6 will create beautiful cut-paper heart forms using an Early American tradition called needle piercing, marbleized paper and foil paper collage. (Gr. 1-3, Saturday, Feb. 6, 1 to 3 p.m.; grades 4-6, Saturday, Feb. 6, 3:30 to 5:30 p.m., $18 members, $23 non-members). During the school vacation week, Feb. 16 to 19, children in grades 1-3 may attend Creative Adventures Vacation Camp offered in collaboration with the South Shore Community Center. Kids will explore, create and investigate art, cooking, science, bowling, gymnastics, sports and computer activities. The cost is $160 members and $180 non-members. To register or for a complete brochure call (781) 383-ARTS. The art center is located at 119 Ripley Rd. in Cohasset.

Eleanor Le Blanc retrospective

The South Shore Art Center will host a retrospective exhibition of Weymouth artist Eleanor Le Blanc through Feb. 7 in the Bancroft Gallery. The exhibition, entitled "A Gradual Awakening," will explore her life's work including monotypes, photographs and a three-dimensional installation. A graduate of Massachusetts College of Art, Le Blanc has exhibited extensively on the South Shore and throughout New England.

In the Dillon Gallery will be an exhibition of work by SSAC Gallery artists entitled, "Resolutions: Photographs, Pastels, Clay Forms." Exhibiting artists include sculptors Debra Giller and Pam Golden, photographers Stephanie Grenadier, Julie Hawkins and Susan White, pastel artist Liz Haywood-Sullivan and clay artist and painter Judy Rossman. In the Manning lobby the faculty feature will be Art Center children's teacher Dorothy Martin Simone.

For more information, call (781) 383-ARTS.

Vacation art series

The Children's Creativity Workshop is offering a special series during the February vacation designed for artists ages 5 through 12 years. The program meets for three days, Monday, Feb. 15, to Wednesday, Feb. 17, for 1-1/2 hours. In the "Miniature Mosaic Workshop" boys and girls will mix a palette of colored clay and use their original composition to complete a mosaic picture. There will be examples of the use of mosaics from the Renaissance to the present.

To register and for information on this series and the continuing winter session, call (781) 749-2453.

Watch school bus rules

Safety Officer Richard Yocum warns all parents to pay attention to traffic rules regarding parked school buses at the Deer Hill and Osgood schools.

Yocum said parents are driving around or passed the parked buses which have their lights flashing while children are being dropped off in the morning and picked up in the afternoon.

Police have been issuing written warnings but soon will start writing tickets which can carry a $200 fine.

Democrats to hold caucuses

Registered Democrats in Cohasset will hold a caucus Saturday, Feb. 6, at 11 a.m. to elect delegates and alternates to the 1999 Massachusetts Democratic Convention.

Cohasset Democrats will be electing four delegates and four alternates equally divided between men and women to represent their ward or town at the 1999 Convention. The apportioned number of delegates has been allotted based upon a formula giving equal weight to Democratic Party registrants and the average vote for Democratic candidates in the last general elections for Governor and President as published in the Massachusetts Elections Statistics Public Documents for 1996 and 1998.

Caucus Chair Agnes McCann will call the caucus at 11 a.m. at Cohasset Town Hall.

The caucus is open to all registered Democrats, those ineligible to register, and media representatives. Only those Democrats registered to vote in the town or ward are eligible to participate and vote in this caucus. There is no proxy or absentee voting. Candidates for delegate/alternate must give their permission in writing and be nominated. All candidates may make a two minute statement and may distribute materials on their behalf. All ballots are written and secret. Those candidates receiving the greatest number of votes on the first ballot shall be elected. Slate making is allowed, but no special preference will be allowed. There is no quorum requirement and no admission fee or charge at the caucus, although donations may be solicited by the ward or town committee.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity, or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited. Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed at the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 129 Portland St., Boston, MA 02114 no later than 10 days after caucus date.

Stanton is Citizen of the Year

Turning 80 can't slow her down

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

When Katherine Stanton heard about the "Suitcases for Kids" project last summer, she sprang into action.

A state Department of Social Services volunteer case reviewer for more than five years, Stanton understands the plight of foster children.

"I just go day by day. Whatever has to be done, has to be done. Somehow it all fits in."

— Katherine Stanton, Citizen of the Year

"DSS was looking for suitcases because when a child is removed from home and put in foster care, they often have nothing but a trash bag to put their belongings in," the grandmother of six explained.

Shortly after she placed a brief news item soliciting help in "Around Town" in the Co-

Work starts at Red Lion Inn

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

What's happening at the Red Lion Inn? A lot. Red Lion Inn owner Gerde Ordelheide has begun work to turn the Red Lion Inn into one of the nicest inns in New England. The scope of work is evident by viewing the demolition going on now. The entire back of the building has been torn down. All that remains are the surrounding walls as workers begin digging the new foundation. The Red Lion Inn has not been spared from Cohasset's notorious problems with ledge. The basement needs to be deeper to accommodate a new elevator and expanded kitchen. Ordelheide said workers may need to blast out the ledge to lay a proper foundation.

"The issue of revitalization is important in town and a resort can help."

— Gerde Ordleheide, owner

The outlook for the Red Lion Inn is more optimistic than at any time in recent memory. The Red Lion Inn has had a long and sometimes troubled history as a business. The historic inn was built in 1704. In 1996, the Inn was sold at auction to Florida businessman, Carl Akerblom, who promised massive renovations. Akerblom held on to the property for 18 months without doing much work, then sold it Ordelheide in June, 1998.

The town has high hopes for a revived Red Lion Inn. Many residents want the inn to re-open as a quaint local restaurant and place of lodging. Business leaders consider the Red Lion Inn a crucial part of any Cohasset Village revitalization plan. Ordelheide is poised to deliver everything the town hopes to gain from a renovated Red Lion Inn and more.

EPA questions rail's impact on air quality

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

The federal Environmental Protection Agency is calling for a new environmental study of the MBTA's proposal to restore Greenbush rail service to the South Shore.

"This is one of the most important developments in recent years," said Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan. "(The town) met with the EPA recently and they listened to us when we said Greenbush restoration couldn't be considered an air quality measure. There may be reasons to build or not to build it, but based on the air quality issue, it's out the window."

While the EPA found the project would lead to both air quality benefits in the form of overall reduced emissions of carbon monoxide and volatile organic compounds, the agency also said there are negative impacts related to the overall increased nitrogen oxide emissions.

However, Andrew Brennan of the MBTA is undaunted by the EPA's call for another study. He said the transit authority decided to restore Greenbush, the Old Colony line running from Weymouth, through Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate, based on much more than the air quality issue.

"There were transportation and economic reasons as well," said Brennan, the MBTA's director of environmental affairs.

"There may be reasons to build or not to build it, but based on the air quality issue, it's out the window."

— Alexander Macmillan, Hingham Greenbush coordinator

With regard to nitrogen oxide emissions, Brennan said the MBTA is taking a serious look at performing the equivalent of a "tune-up" on its diesel engines to make them run cleaner, although commuter rail lines aren't required to do so until 2005.

"We're very happy to see the EPA verified that we did our analysis correctly, because we identified the nitrogen oxide issue in our studies," Brennan said.

However, according to EPA Deputy Regional Administrator Mindy Lubber, the air quality impacts of the project "are not significant enough to serve as either an endorsement for, nor an argument against, the restoration."

Rail proponent David Clinton of Hingham is surprised that the EPA is calling for another study.

"This project has been studied since 1985," he said. "I'll be retired by the time it goes forward."

Clinton calls additional studies "just another delay and waste of money." The cost of the project has increased from approximately $130

Old Osgood's insurance rate changes

The town's insurance agent informed town manager Mark Haddad that the coverage on the old Osgood School will need to be changed now that it is a vacant building.

The replacement value is set at $1,353,223. It was originally covered at $2 million and has been reduced to cover the vacancy.

Although Haddad recommended that the town go with a 5 percent deductible, selectmen opted for 10 percent as a budget saving measure. This means an annual premium of $7,795 and the town's exposure with deductible. Is $135,323.

Marina neighbors want inclusion

Parker Avenue residents want to be kept informed about meetings between Cohasset Marina owner Paul Trendowicz — who received approval from the conservation commission to expand 290 feet further to the east and add 38 new slips — and the town's negotiating committee. Trendowicz still wants 15 more slips.

A handful of marina neighbors showed up at Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting to ask if and when the marina expansion would be on the agenda.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris explained that Trendowicz had cancelled a scheduled meeting with the negotiating committee last week, and that they did not know when they would next meet on the matter.

"I would suggest that you keep in touch to find out," said McMorris.

Recycling committee receives grant

Selectman Merle Brown said that the town's recycling committee got a $1,972 grant from the municipal recycling incentive program. That's about $200 more than last year's grant of approximately $1,800.

Lagrotteria resigns as teen director

Jen Lagrotteria youth coordinator, has resigned from her position as Teen Center youth coordinator due to time constraints.

Lagrotteria said that Shoe Market, her family's store in Cohasset, has really taken off and she needs to devote more time to it.

"Between school and work and the 20-25 hours a week that I was putting in with the kids, I was really pushing it," said Lagrotteria. "I loved the job, but there is no way you can do that job right when you're also working full-time. I suggested to Mark Haddad that he hire a full-time person, because that's what the position requires. It was a tough decision; the kids are so great and the teen center, when it finally opens, will be phenomenal. I still want to do some volunteer work there."

Town manager Haddad said that he would keep selectmen informed about the search process for a new youth coordinator.

"I've left funding in the budget for the position," he said.

The position pays up to $12 an hour, Recreation Director Jack Worley said.

Tracking document requested from MBTA

Town manager Mark Haddad penned a letter to the MBTA at selectman Nan Roth's request.

The letter asks for a tracking document of all past correspondence between the town and the MBTA.

McElroy requests new veterans' agent, new salary

Former school committee member Joseph McElroy, representing the local VFW and American Legion Posts, told selectmen that the current veterans' agent's caseload is "diminishing" because he has not made his presence visible to local veterans and has too often been unresponsive.

McElroy said that VFW and American Legion meetings had unanimously voted for a change of agent and an increased salary for the incoming veterans' agent. The current salary for the agent is $1,600; McElroy is recommending a $2,000 raise.

McElroy said that there are approximately 28 million veterans in the United States. He estimates that that would translate to an estimated 750 Cohasset veterans, of which 300 are members of either the VFW, American Legion or both. He also said that veterans' families and gold star mothers are eligible for veterans' services and assistance.

But in a letter to selectmen, veteran's agent Noel Ripley, who has held the job for 12 years, said he continues to offer help and answer questions that are asked of him.

"I see no justification for raising the salary, considering the present workload of the Cohasset veteran's agent," he said.

Ripley said he would like to continue in the post.

"I feel I have done a good job and will be pleased to answer any questions about my function that you would like to ask," he said.

Town Census for 1999

The Town Census for 1999 has been mailed to each household. The local census is primarily used to maintain voting and jury lists but it also aids in school enrollment projections, public safety and senior citizens' needs. The local census also establishes proof of residency, which is often needed for certain privileges, such as transfer station stickers and cemetery rights, certain veterans' benefits, and reduced tuition rates at state colleges and universities.. Dog forms were enclosed. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31, 1999. Forms need to be returned as soon as possible. If you did not receive one, call the Town Clerk's office.

Chiropractic for HEALTH
by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg
Chiropractor

MORE POPULAR THAN EVER

A new survey conducted at Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center and Harvard Medical School shows that Americans make more visits to alternative health practitioners, including chiropractors, than to primary care medical doctors. While an estimated four Americans in ten utilized at least one "complementary" remedy in 1997, the estimate for those between the ages of 35 and 49 was five in ten. Between 1991 and 1997, the number of visits by Americans to alternative practitioners rose 47% to a total of 629 million. About half of these visits to "alternative" practitioners were for chiropractic or massage. Most who visited an alternative practitioner for a serious condition also saw a medical doctor, which points out the complementary nature between the disciplines.

Have you tried chiropractic care for your ailments? Physical, orthopedic, and neurological tests can help reveal the condition of your spine. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we are uniquely qualified to restore the health of your spine. Along with spinal adjustments and related treatments, we emphasize healthy everyday living. For quality chiropractic care – without drugs or surgery – please call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we stress preventive healthcare for the entire family. Through our "Mothers Morning Out" program we offer all the latest scientific research combined with holistic and chiropractic philosophy.

P.S. The above-mentioned survey updates one undertaken in 1990, and published in 1993, which indicated that three in ten Americans used alternative therapies.

Stanton is Cohasset's Citizen of the Year

hasset Mariner, Stanton was inundated with dozens of suitcases from the community which she then spent two weeks delivering to DSS offices in Plymouth, Dorchester, Jamaica Plain and Weymouth.

Although Stanton helps others quietly behind the scenes — her name has become synonymous with a myriad of volunteer causes and good deeds.

For her tireless service to the town and so many people over the years, Stanton was named the 1998 Cohasset Mariner Citizen of the Year.

"Even on her 80th birthday, when her friends and relatives decorated patches to be made into a memory quilt for her," said Stanton's daughter, Mary E. Hynes. "Her first thought of the day after they were presented to her was to call someone to see if the yet-unmade quilt could be donated for display at the annual charity quilt show in town."

A four-member selection committee including Elaine Breslow of Old Pasture Road, Tom Wigmore of Ash Street, Joe McElroy of Windy Hill Road and Mary Ford, editor of the Cohasset Mariner met at the Mariner office in Hingham Square on Saturday. They selected Stanton out of a field of 17 nominees submitted by 29 different citizens.

Stanton has called Cohasset "home" since moving to town 53 years ago.

"It was the end of the war, my husband had been discharged from the Navy," she recalled. "We tried everywhere to find a place to live. It was Mother's Day and we took my husband's mother out for a drive and wound up down in the square in Cohasset."

The young couple rented a small house on River Road where three of their four children were born before building a house on Clay Spring Road where Stanton and her youngest, Robert "Buzzy" Stanton, still reside.

Stanton makes no claims to being a modern "wonder woman" who could do it all, although she was able to balance her 20 years as a teacher in Hingham with the needs of her family and so many others.

"I was asked by a friend to help with a Girl Scout troop," Stanton recalls with a smile about one of her foray into local volunteerism. "Every Thursday we had nothing for supper except scrambled eggs and bacon because I'd come home with a raging headache."

After that, she took on the job of administrator for the local Red Cross swimming program that used to conduct lessons in the harbor.

"Then along came one Dr. Robert Sceery who arrived in town and tested the water. There was no swimming in the harbor after that," she said, about the pollution he found. So Stanton had to orchestrate the move to the colder waters of Sandy Beach that included making a huge box to store equipment, such as ropes and posts, so lessons could be set up there.

Little did Stanton know at the time, but her efforts would set the stage for a long stint in town politics. She was asked to serve on the recreation committee, the forerunner of the recreation commission, which set up the town's recreation department.

Then she ran for school committee and lost to Bill Poland, a popular candidate who ran the gas station at Depot Court. But at Poland's encouragement, she didn't give up. She ran the following year and served for a total of 12 years.

"It was wonderful," she recalls about her years on the school committee. "It was never a chore, although we had our differences and all had our definite ideas."

One of the efforts of which she is proudest is her family's involvement in the creation of the Cohasset Sailing Club along with Herb Towle, a great friend.

She points to the corner of her living room where on a cold, November Sunday evening nearly 40 years ago, she, her late husband Gerard Stanton and Towle sat to talk about what could be done with Government Island and sailing for kids. With help from the two families' children, Charlie Waaser and many other friends, the fledging club grew to become the "town" institution it is today.

In 1976, Stanton decided it was time to retire from teaching. She recalled at the time her sister-in-law died suddenly and a friend was diagnosed with cancer — two events that made her rethink her priorities.

"When friends would say, 'come to lunch,'" she said. "I'd say, 'I can't because I'm teaching.'

"It was time for myself, there were things I wanted to do."

But in reality what retirement did for Stanton was to open up even more time for helping others.

She served as a volunteer driver for the senior shuttle for 20 years reluctantly resigning after two hip operations and suffering from severely arthritic knees.

Katherine Stanton relaxes in the living room of her home on Clay Spring Road.

"I gave up the shuttle when I realized I was helping people on and off who were much younger and more agile than I," she laughs.

But even at 80, it's tough to slow Stanton down.

"She continues to do much volunteering," Hynes, her daughter, said. "This includes serving as a caretaker and guardian angel of her quadriplegic son, to several years in the arduous task of shelving returned books to the library, as well as speaking eloquently at town meeting when she and the audience need clarification on an issue."

Always thinking of others, Stanton even keeps a turkey or roasting chicken in the freezer in order to prepare and deliver them to any family in her neighborhood that is undergoing a crisis.

It's no wonder that 75 people helped her celebrate becoming an octogenarian last October.

Although getting older isn't something Stanton dwells on.

"I just go day by day," she said. "Whatever has to be done, has to be done. Somehow it all fits in."

Hynes wrote in her nomination of Stanton: "She just soldiers on, often in pain, but with boundless love, generosity, and enthusiasm for service to others from the youngest infants in foster care, to her 90-plus year old friend for whom she does errands.

"I hope the committee will agree that this is the kind of selfless, gracious and cheerful spirit that is what Cohasset's Citizen of the Year should be," Hynes said.

Work starts at Red Lion Inn

"The issue of revitalization is important in town and a resort can help," Ordelheide said.

Resort? It's true. Ordelheide isn't just renovating the Red Lion Inn. He says he's building an entire resort with lodging, function rooms, tennis courts, a pool, a restaurant, a bistro, a bakery and all modern conveniences in a quaint setting replete with four-post beds and other remembrances of things past.

The resort will not be confined to the Red Lion Inn building alone. Last July, Ordelheide made a major investment in the Red Lion Inn's future when he bought the "Lilac House", built in 1789, next-door at 83-85 South Main Street for $600,000. Ordelheide plans to use it for a cafe/bistro, retail bakery, and function rooms. Work will begin soon to tear down the right side of the Lilac House and replace it with a new, two-story wing. The old flower shop will serve as a bistro. The upstairs will provide function space for wedding receptions, private gatherings and business meetings.

The Red Lion Inn has also yielded some historic treasures as the work has progressed. Ordelheide said the demolition in the rear of the building uncovered old fireplaces from when there was a farm on the property. He has also found old papers and documents dating back to 1901-1902.

So when will the Red Lion Inn reopen for business? Ordelheide is shooting for six months of work before re-opening, although his contractor says the job will take eight months. Whatever the time frame, residents can look forward to a new jewel anchoring the village sometime in the next year.

"We're taking the time to do it right," Ordelheide said. "This will be the nicest inn in all of New England. With Peter Roy doing work at the Chart House, it makes a lot of sense for the revitalization effort to do everything right."

The back half of the Red Lion Inn was demolished this week in preparation for a major renovation and restoration project at the inn which was built in 1704.

Consolidated Cohasset DPW is proposed

Would eliminate elected boards

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Selectman Tom Callahan is taking matters into his own hands.

Upset with a citizens' article from the water commission which would essentially strip the town manager of much of his authority, Callahan has a plan of his own.

If the other selectmen go along with it, he plans to offer an article for the annual town meeting that would establish an appointed DPW board that would replace the elected sewer and water commissions.

"I find this citizens' article is absurd to reverse the process the town voted for," Callahan said.

Over objections of the selectmen at the time, the 1997 annual town meeting approved the Town Manager Act, which changed Cohasset's government to one of more centralized management.

Callahan said now certain boards want to protect their independent structure and the town cannot have it both ways.

Referring to the sewer and water boards, Callahan sees his proposal as eliminating "two anachronistic fiefdoms."

"To cancel out what we did makes no sense," Callahan said about the water commission's article. Articles are items of business on the warrant that comes before town meeting.

"To cancel out what we did makes no sense."
— Selectman Tom Callahan on centralized government

Selectman Ronnie McMorris supported the concept. She pointed out that many towns are moving away from elected boards and a real DPW consolidation should include the water and sewer departments.

The water commission article would allow the water commission to do its own procurement and would strip the town manager of his authority to award contracts to all who are not under the jurisdiction of the board of selectmen, Haddad explained.

The sewer commission is also embroiled in a power issue with the Town Manager Act. Sewer commissioners took the selectmen to court over who has the right to award contracts for the sewer project. A judge took the matter under advisement and a decision is expected soon.

Election '99

Whitley joins election

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Roger Whitley, 11 Cedar Lane, has taken out election nomination papers this week.

Whitley, a former chairman of the town's advisory committee, is the third person to seek one of three seats on the board of library trustees. He joins incumbents Sheila Evans and Roger Lowe who took out nomination papers last month.

Last week, Raymond Kasperowicz, 172 S. Main St., and incumbent William Good, 269 Atlantic Ave., were the only residents to take out election nomination papers. Kasperowicz plans to run for the seat on the sewer commission being vacated by long-time incumbent Ted Guild. Good will seek his third term.

So far there are no takers for the seat on the board of assessors held by James Lagrotteria, who will not seek a fifth term.

Other residents who have obtained nomination papers from the town clerk's office are as follows:

Incumbents planning to seek reelection include selectmen Nan Roth and Ronnie McMorris; Town Moderator George Marlette, Town Clerk Marion Douglas and water commissioner Richard Muncey.

School committee chairman Rick Shea, school committee secretary Joseph McElroy and health board chairman Kevin Ulmer have announced they won't seek reelection to their respective boards.

Newcomer Ann Barrett, 60 Elm St., has taken out papers for a seat on the Cohasset Housing Authority held by Betty Grassie.

The deadline for returning nomination papers with the signatures of at least 50 registered voters is Feb. 22.

Nomination papers available at Town Hall

Nomination papers for the Annual Town Election on April 10 are available at the Town Clerk's Office. In order to hold an elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town.

PROPOSED MEDICAL CENTER ROUTE 3A COHASSET
Edward D. Cornier Associates, Inc. Architects

Medical center slated for Rt. 3A

Planners okay foundation plans

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The planning board laid the foundation for a new medical center off Route 3A near Crocker Lane last week.

Wayne Sawchuk, who is consultant to the development of land owned by Crocker Realty II, spoke to planning members on behalf of landowner Paul Barry. He predicted that the four-story building "will be the medical center of Cohasset and will be healthy for taxes."

Several firms will be involved with the design and construction of the building, which is expected to be completed in the early fall.

A group of doctors which plans to occupy a section of the building have chosen Charles James Associates of Waltham as their architect.

Edward D. Cornier Associates of Milford will work on the building's exterior.

The main body of construction work will be completed by Tedeschi Realty Corporation of Rockland, the firm that worked on the new Shaws on 3A.

"Crocker II is impressed with their efficiency and the quality of their work at Shaws, so they were a natural choice," said Sawchuk in a phone interview this week.

The proposed medical center may have some competition at the other end of town on 3A where Donald Staszko's 10-acres currently occupied by the South Shore Chevy Geo and an automobile body shop are rumored to be the site of a new medical building.

Recently, Staszko would not confirm the rumors that he is looking to construct a medical building there, saying, "there is nothing concrete" yet planned.

The Crocker II medical center lies at the opposite end of Route 3A in Cohasset from Stazsko's property.

"Looking down from 3A from Sunrise, it will look like a manor. It will be an architect-designed building with a village-type appearance."
— Wayne Sawchuk, development consultant

The building will be have shingle and real brick exterior.

Sawchuk said that the basement area will be divided in half, with 5,000 square feet occupied by an area hospital's imaging center with an ambulatory entrance. The other half will house mechanical rooms and an area for extra ventilation. The two 10,000 square feet floors above will be occupied by a doctor's group and the rest of the building will be rented by other medical specialists. The attic area nets out to approximately 6,400 square feet.

"Looking down from 3A from Sunrise, it will look like a manor," said Sawchuk. "It will be an architect-designed building with a village-type appearance."

Planning board member Robert Sturdy was less concerned with aesthetics and more worried about the ecological safety of placing a medical facility with radioactive and medical waste close to Little Harbor.

"That whole area is a big vein of sand that goes out to Little Harbor and that's where stuff travels freely," he said. "To me, the worst possible hazard in the world is that every damn chemical—radioactive and medical tests from the building and sanitary waste system—will go down the drain and into Cohasset's sanitary waste system. Has the Board of Health been involved?," he asked.

Sawchuk said that the Board of Health would be involved with the project.

"Barry needs to make sure it's done right," he said. "When we did Sunrise, things came up like water from the hair salon which is pumped and goes to a hazardous waste facility."

Chairman Al Moore said that he didn't anticipate a problem with what Sawchuk had submitted, but that town consulting engineer John Modzelewski of Civil Deigns Inc., Boston, would have to look it over.

"All approved, but limited to the foundation plan," Moore said.

Sawchuk said that he would provide Board of Health requirements to the planning board within the next two weeks.

ART AWARDS

We received a list of students who received awards after entering their work in The Boston Globe Scholastic Art Awards — four students are to be commended; Ross Lieb Lappen, a 14-year-old eighth-grader, won a Gold Key, (his work was a self-portrait, mixed media); Jack Jerz, a 14-year-old ninth-grader, won a Silver Key (his work title was "Behind," a painting); Jackie Goines, a 15-year-old ninth-grader, won Honorable Mention (her work was entitled "Rocking Chair," photography); and Ben Peterson, a 16-year-old 11th-grader, won Honorable Mention (his work was entitled "The Window," photography).

The Gold and Silver Key winning student artists were honored individually at the Awards Ceremony Sunday, Feb. 7, at the State Transportation Building. If you would like to see the exhibit, and see Cohasset's own winning works, the Exhibit is at the State Transportation Building through Feb. 26. They are open Monday to Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturdays and Sundays noon to 4 p.m.

Congratulations to all four of you, you make us proud! And to your teachers: Nina Berkowitz, Bonnie Muir and Eileen Roher!

VASSAR COLLEGE NEWS

Here is some lovely news from Vassar College! Vassar announces that they have received a bequest of $370,847 from the late Gertrude Hooper, Vassar class of 1927, of Cohasset. The bequest is to be used for the college's general endowment. That's a special thing to do!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

Tons of Cohasset "celebs" have birthdays this month, here are but a few: Anna Abbruzzese, Dennis Kuntz, Al Buckley, Debbie Anderson, Jane Hubbard, Ruth Goodwin, Sara Marmo, Mary McElroy, Mary Lou Tedeschi, Ham Tewksbury and The Rev. Gary Ritts. Hopefully all of these ladies and gents will fill us in on what they did on their happy day; in any case, we wish you the best and hope that your special day was, or will be, special indeed!

A GREAT GAL

It's nice to see Nancy Anderson Around Town lately — even though she lives so close, time flies and we don't see much of her. Such a great gal, full of smiles, fun and good humor!

LUNCHEON VOLUNTEERS

Every Tuesday and Thursday, the Cohasset Elder Affairs provides a delicious luncheon at the Cohasset Senior Center at noon. Nancy Barrett is "Site Manager," and they all cannot say enough nice things about her! "She is capable, efficient and has a warm, full-of-fun personality. She has warmed up the kitchen since she arrived." They are always looking for volunteers to help set up, serve food, clean up and vacuum. If you would like to join this fun team, call Sheila Donovan, volunteer coordinator, at 383-9112. Monthly menus are available at the center. The program Feb. 16 will be a video from the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, entitled "Monet in the 20th Century;" Feb. 23 will be the fourth visit of Richard Begel from the South Shore Conservatory. His topic this year is "Humor in Music-Part II."

Local volunteer Greg Hoffman, of Cohasset, is pictured with WGBH/Channel 2 Auction manager Edye Baker, during the auction's recent Auction kick off at the WGBH studios on Western Avenue in Boston. Hoffman will coordinate teams of volunteers who will solicit and pick up donations from businesses and individuals to their local areas. More than 8,000 items are donated to the auction each year.

VALENTINE'S TEA

Seniors can also plan to join in the fun Friday, Feb. 12, at 1 p.m., for the Special Valentine's Day Tea. The Board of Directors plans this yearly event which includes light tea sandwiches, finger desserts and special teas, all served in china cups out of a lovely silver tea service. Please call 383-9112.

SHROVE TUESDAY

Finally, be sure to set aside Shrove Tuesday (Feb. 16). That's when the gourmet class under the direction of Anna Abbruzzese (one of the best cooks around) are preparing their traditional "Stone Soup." You will be asked to bring an item for the food pantry plus $1.75. Call 383-9112 for more information.

ON THE MEND

We hear that Amy Silvia is at home recuperating from her recent ankle surgery — here's hoping that you are hopping on the ankle of your choice by Easter Bunny time, Amy!

FOOD PANTRY WISH LIST

Every once in a while we are asked to print the food pantry's wish list, and here it is: laundry detergent, dishwashing liquid, bleach, shampoo, Kleenex, shampoo, regular coffee, ketchup and small jars of mayonnaise. Do what you can and , after you've gotten everything together, drop your items off at the pantry.

BIG SHOES TO FILL

Lots of people were saddened to learn of the resignation of Joe McElroy from the Cohasset School Committee, effective last week. Joe did an admirable job during his time on the Committee, he tried his best to be fair and objective. His shoes will be hard to fill, however, if you think you're up to the task, you can obtain nomination papers from now until Feb. 18. You will be running for a one-year term, as that was the amount of time left on Joe's current term.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Citizen of the Year

As editor of The Cohasset Mariner, it is my pleasure to announce that Katherine Stanton of Clay Spring Road has been selected as the 1998 Citizen of the Year.

Although Mrs. Stanton works quietly behind the scenes — except when she has a cause to take before town meeting — her name is almost synonymous with volunteerism.

While nominations were open, a total of 29 different individuals and families took the time to nominate a citizen, detailing his or her contributions to help make this town one we all love.

Our thanks go to Elaine Breslow of Old Pasture Road, Tom Wigmore of Ash Street and Joe McElroy of Windy Hill Road for joining me at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square for the challenging and pleasurable task of poring over the nominations.

Regrettably, we cannot recognize each of the 17 nominees with the Citizen of the Year Award. And we thank all those who wrote such thoughtful letters and notes nominating their fellow citizens.

The selection committee narrowed the field down to nine, then five, three and finally one. The final decision — although not reached without considerable discussion — was unanimous.

So we extend our heartfelt congratulations to Mrs. Stanton, a retired school teacher and grandmother of six, who continues to find the time to devote to a number of volunteer roles — not the least of which is serving as a case reviewer for the state Deptartment of Social Services.

Stanton's daughter, Mary E. Hynes, put it best:

"She just soldiers on, often in pain, but with boundless love, generosity and enthusiasm for service to others from the youngest infants in foster care, to her 90-plus year old friend for whom she does errands."

With the award, the Cohasset Mariner offers recognition for making a difference. In our society too many role models go unrecognized. Too often people today look to the sports, rock or movie star with envy, when the real hero is the local police officer, fire fighter, parent, teacher, church leader or government official.

The annual Citizen of the Year award is our way of taking our hats off to a person among us who goes that extra mile without asking for anything in return but the intrinsic reward of helping to make Cohasset a better place.

As Mrs. Hynes said, "I hope the committee will agree that this is the kind of selfless, gracious and cheerful spirit that is what Cohasset's Citizen of the Year should be."

In addition to all those heroes listed above, there were many others generous with their time who organized the event, called or organized prospective donors to schedule appointments and many people who worked the day of the Blood Drive to help with registration, the canteen and as donor escorts. Report coyote sightings to animal control officer

I am compiling a survey of coyote sightings in town. Please call 383-9119 with any coyote sightings. Leave the day, time and location. This way I can keep tabs on the coyote population. The following information on coyotes is reprinted here in the Cohasset Mariner with permission from the Mass. Division of Fisheries and Wildlife.

The Eastern Coyote

Coyotes currently live within our community. To make your property less attractive and to avoid having problems with them, here are some basic steps that you should follow:

Don't feed Coyotes! Feeding ultimately alters the animal's behaviour. They become dependent upon and less wary of humans. This can lead to potential problems (bites, scratches, encounters with pets).

Don't leave pet food outdoors! If you must feed pets outside the home provide only the amount that your pet will finish in one feeding.

Don't approach or try to pet coyotes! Don't provoke an encounter with a coyote y coming too close or restricting its free movement.

Do secure your garbage! Coyotes knock over trash cans or tear open trash bags left in the open. Don't provide potential meals.

Do secure your pets! Although free roaming pets are more likely to be killed by automobiles than by wild animals, coyotes and foxes do view pets as potential food. For the safety of your pet, keep it restrained at all times.

ANIMAL CONTROL

PAUL MURPHY 383-9119

More Coyote Information

Coyotes are the size of a medium-sized dog, but with longer, thicker fur. Coyotes have a long, bushy black-tipped tail that is usually carried pointed down. Their snout is long and slender, and their ears are pointed and erect. The pelts of coyotes in Massachusetts range from grayish-black to blondes, light tan, dark tan, or even all black. Females weigh 33-40 lbs and males are slightly larger (34-47). Coyotes can attain weights 50-60 lbs.

Coyotes are usually shy and elusive. Male and female coyotes pair up, establish a territory, and breed in February or March; 4 to 8 pups are born in April or May. Activity is variable; they can be active at night or day, and sightings at dawn or dusk are common. They remain active all year-round and o not hibernate. Coyotes are often seen individually, in pairs, or in small groups. The area a coyote uses may vary from 4 to 30 square miles.

They are opportunistic feeders and their primary foods include small rodents, rabbits, deer, birds, snakes, frogs, and insects. They will also eat fruits, berries, vegetables, garbage, and pet food left outdoors. In some areas they prey upon unprotected pets, including house cats, and have been known to attack domestic dogs.

Cohasset schools: high expectations at what cost?

Part 1, Updating policies, establishing accountability

The Cohasset School committee is the equivalent of an elected board of directors. The superintendent is the committee's chief executive officer and educational advisor. The most important responsibility of the school committee is to establish policy. It should be done in close consultation with the superintendent. Last year,

THE WAY I SEE IT

a subcommittee of the school committee undertook the first major review of Cohasset school policies since 1980 (The impact of the Education Reform Act of 1993 was incorporated in 1994). Subcommittee particpants included Pat Martin, Fred Johansen, Lee Jenkins, Betsy Connolly, students Ted Goff and Megan Connolly, PSO representative Eileen Hart and MS-HG council members Jeanne Quigley and Nancy Hertig as well as the author.

On Nov. 19, 1998, the subcommittee provided the school committee and the superintendent a "draft" of the updated policy manual. Hopefully, with the holidays behind us and the budget being completed, the "draft" will be given a high priority for review and adoption during upcoming months.

Some enhancements incorporated in the "draft" include:

- Provisions for cross-referencing topics to state law and policies maintained by the Massachusetts Association of School Committee (MCAS) as well as to students and faculty handbooks.
- Establishing a 12-month milestone calendar (this will focus principals, school councils, the superintendent and the school committee on priority objectives).
- Expectations relevant to student conduct.
- A. wide variety of topics not included in the current policy manual to include: proper accountability; maintenance of a strategic plan; fiscal management (recommendations include establishing a budget calendar, regularly scheduled spending updates, school committee approval for line-item transfers that exceed a specified threshold and pre-approval by the school committee before creating new job positions); buildings and grounds management, security and safety; sports policy; technology policy.

By attending school committee meetings or listening to them on cable television, you will have the opportunity to learn and contribute to the finalization of policies. Once the school committee has given preliminary approval to a policy, it must be posted for five days to give the opportunity for public comment. Postings will be made at the town hall, Paul Pratt Library and in school buildings. Tentative arrangements have been made to post the policy manual on the Cohasset website.

This is the first in a series of columns by former school committee member Joseph R. McElroy. Mr. McElroy is speaking as a private citizen and not for the school committee.

'Get it right' often forgotten

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The old wire service United Press International, which is now reduced to a Washington bureau and little else, had a motto that urged its staffers to "get it first, but first get it right."

That's good advice to anyone in the news media, be they newspaper, radio or television — or even the Internet — but there is a growing body of evidence that fewer of those who gather news are heeding it.

Just the other day, Joe DiMaggio, the Hall of Fame ball player, was watching his favorite Western, "Gunfight at the OK Corral," in his Florida home when word crawled across the bottom of the screen that he had died.

"I'd like to know why the media does this to Joe," said his brother, Dom. "They must get a medal for being the first one to say that Joe passed on."

This surprised the 84-year-old Yankee Clipper's lawyer, Morris Engelberg, who happened to be watching the gunfight with him. A quick check of Joe's pulse indicated to him that his companion was very much alive.

The offering network, NBC, ran a correction 10 minutes later but the deed was done.

"I'd like to know why the media does this to Joe," said his brother, Dom. "They must get a medal for being the first one to say that Joe passed on."

Among the plethora of news media that assault our eyes and ears daily so much emphasis is placed on getting it first that the second part of the UPI's motto, "but first get it right," is often forgotten.

Closer to home, there was Edmund Burke, the Walpole eccentric who was accused — but not charged — with the murder of Irene Kennedy, who was beaten, bitten and stabbed 29 times while walking in the park.

Burke appeared on TV in handcuffs, doing what the cops call "the perp walk," and newspapers were warming up the electric chair, when a check of the hard evidence showed that his DNA didn't match that found in the teeth marks on the body and a palm print at the scene was not his.

"I've been smeared by the press, carted our of my house with people cheering as I was taken away. It's not a pleasant thing to experience," said Burke, after he was released and taken home, where frozen pipes during his absence had destroyed part of the house.

The drive to get it first no matter the consequences was never more obvious than the case of Richard Jewell, the security guard who was accused — but never charged — with setting off a lethal bomb at the Atlanta Olympics.

The press, with the complicity of the FBI I must add, descended on Jewell like a block of locusts on an Iowa cornfield.

Headline writers had a field day. "A roly poly loser," one headline writer called him. A psychological profile of the bomber was said to fit Jewell to a tee. A shrink was quoted as saying (by long distance) he "sounds like someone who craves excitement the way an arsonist does."

Then, after weeks of being pointed out as the bomber, Jewell was released and went back to being what he really was, the hero who discovered the bomb and probably saved a few lives with his warning.

By then, the news media that got it first but didn't get it right had gone on to the next victim.

EPA questions rail's impact on air quality

million to about $285 million.

"By delaying the project, opponents are responsible for the additional cost," said Clinton. "If we get Greenbush running like the other two Old Colony lines, people will ask, 'Why didn't we have this 15 years ago?'"

On the other hand, Nancy Buckley, co-founder of the Coastal Coalition, a grass-roots organization seeking alternatives to rail restoration, says the Army Corps of Engineers should now be encouraged to deny the MBTA the permit to proceed with the Greenbush project.

"Let's hope the effort to resurrect this train line, built before the Civil War, is not extended into the 21st century," she said. "The EPA now recognizes there are compelling environmental and health concerns related to the emissions from diesel-fueled trains."

In a letter to William F. Lawless of the Army Corps of Engineers, Lubber acknowledged the EPA is aware the environmental review process for the Greenbush line restoration has taken many years.

"One of the most important objectives we all share is to complete the process not only promptly, but in a fashion that does not lead to protracted litigation," Lubber wrote.

The EPA is calling for bringing closure to the remaining unresolved issues in a thorough and expeditious manner, including a public review and comment period.

The EPA is calling for bringing closure to the remaining unresolved issues in a thorough and expeditious manner, including a public review and comment period.

"Planning agencies cannot assume that, simply because a project promotes alternatives to automobile commuter trips, it will necessarily result in overall cleaner air quality," Lubber wrote.

In past years, Greenbush restoration was assumed to be an air quality improvement measure and was included as a commitment in the Massachusetts air quality state implementation plan to mitigate the impacts of the Central Artery/Third Harbor Tunnel project.

The EPA is asking the Army Corps of Engineers, the lead federal agency involved in the Greenbush review, and the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs to join with the MBTA to come up with a joint environmental impact statement/report (EIS/EIR). The EPA is willing to work with all three, along with other interested parties, to ensure the environmental review process proceeds fairly and in a timely manner.

According to Lubber, the EPA would like to see the following issues addressed:

- Impacts to Hingham's historic district;
- Mitigation for impacts to Hingham, including the tunnel option under Hingham Square;
- Alternatives which have not yet been fully analyzed and made available for formal public review and comment, including a combined inter-modal option suggested by Hingham;
- Mitigation for negative air quality impacts from Greenbush and other alternatives; and
- Location of the layover facility.

On May 28, 1998, the New England branch of the EPA issued a letter summarizing its assessment of the air quality impacts associated with Greenbush restoration. But the analysis was immediately withdrawn because a flaw was found in relation to the expected number of train trips each day to and from Greenbush.

"This letter did not reflect a full understanding of many of the points made in previous air quality analyses performed by Technical Resources for Environmental Quality, Inc (TREQ)," Lubber wrote. "EPA mistaken assumption about train trips resulted in skewed results about total tons to be emitted by the Greenbush commuter rail."

Following the withdrawal of the report last May, the EPA held a series of meetings with representatives from Hingham, TREQ (founded by Cohasset resident Kevin O'Keeffe) and the MBTA. Lubber expressed appreciation for the input received during these meetings, and in particular the insights offered by O'Keeffe and Barry Faulkner of Sverdrup Civil, Inc. (consultants hired by the MBTA).

Health board revives septic management plan

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The board of health is back from a fresh trip to the drawing board. At Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, the board of health presented its latest version of a plan to address chronic septic problems in areas of town that are not part of the town's current and future sewer projects. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the plan will appear on the town meeting warrant as an article if it is approved by town counsel.

The article seeks to establish an on-site wastewater management plan for homes with septic systems that are not included in the town's new sewer districts. The plan would establish a loan fund with a combination of state and local funds. The loans would be available to homeowners with septic systems that do not meet the requirements of Title V, state environmental codes and local health regulations.

The language in the article is not significantly different from the $13 million on-site wastewater management plan proposed by the board of health at the 1997 special town meeting. Members of the health board withdrew that article at the last minute because of controversy over the cost. The language in the latest article is almost identical to what was proposed in 1997. The biggest change is in the amount, which is now proposed at $5 million. There are also some minor language changes in the explanation of the article, but the eight implementation provisions are identical to the 1997 version.

There are other substantive differences in the latest proposal. In 1997, the board of health proposed a 50 percent tax payer subsidy for septic repairs and upgrades. There is no 50 percent subsidy in the current proposal. Most of the cost of the plan would ultimately be paid by homeowners in the program. Cohasset would pay only for septic upgrades if the board of health and the sewer commission agree such a situation would provide a benefit to the town.

But the source of funding and the use of funds appear to be major sticking points. Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said there seems to be some uncertainty by state officials about whether the town can borrow public money at low interest to loan to private homeowners.

"DEP said that was not a problem anymore, but state bond counsel brought it up again," Godzik said. "Town counsel doesn't feel the plan is necessary, which I don't understand. It's my impression from DEP that without a plan, we're not eligible for funding."

The article seeks to establish an on-site wastewater management plan for homes with septic systems that are not included in the town's new sewer districts. The plan would establish a loan fund with a combination of state and local funds.

Also, town officials are uncertain where the town is going to get any additional money needed to start the program.

During public discussions about the 1997 plan, residents raised fears about "septic police" invading their privacy and forcing people to fix their systems. Those fears were raised again on Tuesday by Wigmore Pierson and some of the selectmen.

"The new plan is more voluntary," said Godzik. "People have the option of not coming in to the plan."

In a telephone interview prior to the meeting, board of health member Stephen Bobo said no one would be forced to repair a system that posed no threat to the environment or public health and safety.

"I felt that the last proposal was the septic police," Bobo said. "It basically said, 'we will inspect'. The nice part about this plan is if someone is operating a cesspool that isn't hurting anyone, no one will bother them. If someone has a privy that isn't bothering anyone, they won't be forced to do anything."

Bobo said the board of health would like to fund the project with $3 million from a state revolving fund and $2 million from an enterprise account. The state supplies funds at or near 0 percent interest for the revolving account and the town can add a maximum of 3/4 percent to cover the administrative costs of implementing the plan, according to Bobo. All costs are passed on to residents in the program. Twenty-year loans would be available for residents who borrow money from the account for septic system upgrades.

Bobo said the plan is needed to abide by the terms of the "second amended final agreement for judgment." Officials from DEP and the Attorney General's office want the town to implement a plan to address septic contamination of the town's water supply. The north and central sewer districts will address the worst areas. The board of health is trying to develop an acceptable plan to deal with the rest of the homes in town with septic systems.

Septic plan gets cool reception

Town counsel opposes it. So does bond counsel. Selectmen are still undecided. But the board of health wants to establish a loan made possible by state and local funds for homeowners with septic systems that don't meet Title V requirements.

Board of Health chairman Kevin Ulmer told selectmen this week that the health board's septic plan is a voluntary program for homeowners with septic systems that may represent a threat to the environment. "Homeowners can have their systems inspected, if they so choose," he said.

So what's the hitch?

If an upgrade has to be done, the town will be responsible., Haddad said.

"If we take this over, there may be a liability to the town and given our current financial situation, I'm concerned about that," he added.

New committee plots town's future

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

"So someone did a bad plan; now we shouldn't make one?" asked Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris, who also sits on the town's growth and development committee.

McMorris was referring to the Benjamin Report, the town's 1961 master plan which estimated present-day Cohasset as a town of 20,000 people, among other-off-the mark predictions. The 1961 plan has been cited recently as evidence of why creating another master town could be a wasteful expense.

But the newly formed growth and development committee wants to tackle issues such as transportation, housing for the elderly and municipal services, as well as more town sewering, which may open up certain areas of the town for new development.

For that reason, the committee invited Jean Christensen, a representative from the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, to help guide them through their first official meeting last week.

The MAPC is a regional agency that works with municipalities on planning issues. Christensen has been involved with master plans in towns west of Boston, such as Wellesley, Framingham and Natick, as well as South Shore towns such as Hanson, Duxbury and Hingham.

"We've done about 14 build-outs," she said. "Scituate, Marshfield, Duxbury and Norwell—all were looking at what the impact of the Greenbush line would be. (A build-out is looking at the town as if all available parcels were fully developed under the current zoning.)

"I've never seen so many communities involved in creating master plans in my 16 years, but with the growth of the South Shore and the possibility of the train, many towns are now interested in planning," Christensen said.

For example, Hingham is still in the early stages of its master plan, which is expected to cover transportation, economic development, open space, public facilities, housing and recreation and leisure time activities issues.

"We want to build it up, but we don't want it to become a strip mall."

— Selectman Tom Callahan on increasing the town's commercial base.

A professional master plan costs no less than $50,000, according to Christensen, who said the committee could expect to add on $7,500 for a build out and $7,000 for a facilitator.

Aside from the Benjamin Report, the town also possesses a "topo" survey — an aerial view of the town superimposed on a grid system — that was done 15 years ago. But the assessor's map was called "a hodgepodge of drawings" by planning board and committee member Robert Sturdy, who complained that the maps are so inaccurate that planning board members often sit and try to sketch property lines in their correct place.

The an article before town meeting to set the stage for a master plan is for $10,000, of which $7,500 would go for a build-out with the balance going for a part-time facilitator.

"We are hoping to tap into some talent in town to help to cut down on costs for a facilitator," said Selectman Tom Callahan, who also sits on the growth & development committee.

What is expected in return, once a planner is chosen, is someone who will listen to what people want and then provide the technical wherewithal and know-how to explain to the town what its plans will mean.

In a town where 93 percent of the tax base comes from residents and the other 7 percent is commercial, building up industry is seen as one priority.

"We want to build it up, but we don't want it to become a strip mall," said Callahan.

Due to the cost, many towns choose to do bits of their plan at a time, focusing on land use, housing, open space and other goals. But in order to prioritize what goals should come before others, the committee will need feedback from the community.

To that end, flyers asking what townspeople would like to see for the town may be sent out in the Mariner, as well as left off in popular gathering spots like the Paul Pratt Library.

"People here are looking to preserve the nature of the town," said Sturdy. "They like the town the way it is."

Callahan suggested that the committee follow Hingham's example, with surveys sent out in spring, meeting with other town boards to discuss the plan, and holding a visionary session on a Saturday in May where Cohasseters can participate in discussions about the master plan.

"Ultimately, we don't know the cost because it will depend on what we put into the study," he said.

"You have a gorgeous town and have to take a lot of pride in it," said Christensen. "It's up to you to generate excitement and interest in the community."

Sturdy wants Jerusalem Road Estates nixed

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Robert Sturdy told fellow planning board members that it's time to "pull the plug" on Weymouth developer Steven Corey's controversial Jerusalem Road Estates subdivision, after the developer cancelled another scheduled meeting with the board.

Once again, concerned abutters and neighbors to the proposed 23-home subdivision showed up at the planning board meeting. Corey's absence did not stop them from protesting the planning board's approval of the project on the 55-acre site off Jerusalem Road several months ago.

"How can this be?" asked a dumfounded William Chisholm, 605 Jerusalem Road, whose home is situated directly across from the proposed development's driveway, and who was not aware of the planners' approval. "You've agreed to the things I protested in my letter. I'm surprised."

Back in October, Corey's plan was approved in a tie-breaking vote cast by chairman Al Moore. His decision was based on the possibility of litigation and also as a way to maintain some control over the project by attaching conditions to the approval.

Sturdy, who opposed the project, explained to Chisholm that there is an appeal going on. He told the board, "You approved something on Oct. 8 and we're now at Feb. 3. That's four months. I think it's time to pull the plug."

The case is currently under appeal by Kevin Brewer who arrived at last week's meeting to contradict a statement Corey's attorney, Charles Humphreys, had said to the effect that things could be worked out.

"For the record, nothing has been worked out or is intended to be worked out," said Brewer.

Humphreys could not be reached for omment.

Brewer and his wife, Debra, bought Robert and Harriette Hunter's 604 Jerusalem Road home last year. The Hunters sold their home of 15 years because they were disturbed by the number of Corey's proposed changes to the development that could potentially affect their own property.

"One week there was a roadway under consideration that would have come up to our kitchen and the next, we were faced with the possibility of a moat," Ms. Hunger had said in a November interview.

The Brewers' attorney, Richard A. Henderson, is appealing based on a non-conforming lot situation that School board asked to lower budget request

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen want the school department to rework their figures so that a proposed 9.9 percent budget hike can be brought down closer to town manager Mark Haddad's original projections, which allowed for a 6 percent increase in the school budget.

School committee chairman Rick Shea presented the school budget for fiscal year 2000 to selectmen on Tuesday. The proposed budget amounted to $8.9 million, just under a 10 percent increase over the current year's budget of $8.2 million. The budget included out of district costs for SPED (special education) students, including some pre-school age children, whose educational expenses are state-mandated.

All agreed that some of the expenses on the school budget could not be avoided, such as state-mandated funding for SPED, which encompasses all children aged three to 22 years, whether they receive their education in Cohasset or not. Shea said the school committee is hardest hit by the out-of-district costs.

Selectmen will meet again at 7 p.m. tonight and the school committee is scheduled for 7:30.

SPED director Lynn Silva explained that special education costs amount to 16 percent of the school budget, which is about average for the state.

But there were other costs that raised some eyebrows, such as the new Joseph Osgood Elementary's utility bills which run nearly as high as the larger high school.

Selectman Merle Brown pointed out that the square footage of the Osgood is smaller than the high school, yet Osgood's heat and electricity bill came to $98,700, which is not too far off from the high school's $103,000 bill.

"The new Osgood is energy efficient, I would hope," said Brown. "You should go back to the architect and ask why it's costing so much. It's triple what the estimated cost should be."

Brown also questioned the $278,000 athletic budget. "Can't we cut back on that?," he asked. "Don't have the whole town pay for what only some people want. Not all the kids are into sports."

The variety of sports available and the cost to transport the students to games accounts for the expense of the athletic budget, according to Shea.

"The new Osgood is energy efficient, I would hope. You should go back to the architect and ask why it's costing so much. It's triple what the estimated cost should be."
SELECTMAN MERLE BROWN

A proposed 7 percent increase in teachers' salaries was challenged by selectman Diane Sullivan, who argued against the timing of a step increase given the state of the school's budget woes. Shea said the raise would bring teachers' salaries into the median range for other teachers in the neighboring towns of Hanover, Hingham, Hull, Norwell and Scituate.

Besides requesting a step raise, the school committee is also seeking to hire a sixth grade teacher and SPED aide for the Deer Hill school, a part-time SPED aide for the high school and a computer teacher for the middle school.

The committee would also like to hire a part-time custodian for the new Osgood school, where teachers are trying to help with maintenance by sweeping their classroom floors each day.

Osgood teacher Cynthia Hurley said that staff already operates on a no-frills budget. "It's a beautiful school and it needs to be maintained," she said. "We do our best. There are no frills. The children have to share learning tools."

If new employees are added to the school's budget, there will be an added $5,000 in health insurance for any employees that fill positions of over 20-hours, Haddad explained.

Shea told selectmen that not hiring a SPED aide for the Deer Hill school could result in a teacher's grievance complaint or possible litigation.

The difficulty with increased enrollment is that several of each classroom's students may have IEPs that require extra attention. That's why Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan would like to hire another teacher for his school, rather than squeeze about 30 students into each class.

Haddad said that if the school budget remains at 9.9 percent, that would require a $830,961 override with an anticipated tax rate for fiscal year 2000 at $16.22. That means that the owner of a $341,124 home who can expect an to pay a tax bill of $5,099 for this year who see a $433.23 increase next year.

School committee member Mark DeGiacomo said that he and committee vice chairman Kathy Ofsthun had met earlier in the day to organize a get-together with legislators to inform them of the town's need for increased aid.

"Having a full-time business person in the school would help," he said. "We've also discussed regionalization on a class by class basis, with other schools offering classes in Latin for our classes in Russian to cut costs."

was created by the planning board's approval of Corey's plans.

Brewer and Henderson, are planning a meeting with neighbors and abutters in Brewer's home to discuss the situation.

The planning board may have accepted the proposal with conditions, but it still faces obstacles from the sewer commission and conservation commission.

The sewer commission won't allow the development to connect to the new sewer line that will link North Cohassset to the Hull sewage treatment plant because of limited capacity in the town's contract with Hull.

The conservation commission said that the proposed project is next to Rattlesnake Run, a perennial river protected under the state's Rivers Protection Act. That act prevents the building of any structure within 200 feet of the perennial river's annual mean high water mark.

Neighbors have been up in arms about the accepted proposal, in part, because Corey's reported failings as a Boston landlord have not made him a welcome figure.

In a July 26, 1998 Boston Globe article, Corey was identified as one of Boston's worst landlords, according to a list compiled by Boston's Inspectional Services Department. Corey had warrants out at that time for his 43 Savin Hill Ave., Dorchester property, explained Boston Housing Court administrator Harvey Chopp. "That information came from inspection services, and I wouldn't disagree with that," he said.

Moore explained that it's unclear what will happen between Corey and the sewer commission.

"The sewer commission is holding firm that they can't take on new hook-ups," he said. "What will happen with that, I don't know. There's no great urgency on this from the standpoint of the builder."

The sweet taste of victory

By David Wolcott

You'd think the CHS wrestling team would still be basking in the limelight after pinning Carver down for the first time in a decade and winning the first league title ever.

You could think that, but you'd be thinking wrong. With the Division III South Sectionals coming up this weekend at Carver High, the Pilgrim Conference Division II champs are more than prepared to do their celebrating at some other time.

You see, there's still some work to do before they pack away the mats for another season

"We're happy about finally beating Carver and winning the league title because it's a great achievement, but this isn't the end of the road by any means," said senior captain Ben Littauer. "Our goal is to bring a state title to the high school and that road starts with the South Sectionals."

"Our job is nowhere near done yet," said Luke Caldwell, another senior captain. "We're talented enough to win a state title and that's what our goal is."

"We're as talented as we have ever been," added the third captain, Mike Baird. "There's a great deal of depth on the team and there seems to be a great will to win on the squad. I think that we have a good chance to win it all."

Coming into the season, the 17-2 Skippers had a goal of dethroning the perennial league champion Carver Crusaders along the way to taking the South Sectional title and maybe even a Division III crown.

They dropped close meets to wrestling powerhouses Wayland and Foxboro along the way, but nothing can take away from what they've accomplished so far this season.

Worley keeps his word to Wildcats

By Mike Hardman
STAFF WRITER

Eric Worley is a lot of things.

He's an excellent student.

A class leader at Marshfield High.

One of the best football players in the state.

And he's a man of his word.

When Northwestern University football coach Gary Barnett decided to leave for the University of Colorado, Worley could have back out of his verbal commitment to become a Wildcats.

"He could have gone to Purdue or Wisconsin," said Marshfield High athletic director Ed Miller. "The Wisconsin coach called me right after the (Northwestern) coach left to see what was up with Eric."

If he had decided to forgo his dream of playing in the Big Ten, Boston College head coach Tom O'Brien would have found an Eagle jersey that would have fit Worley. The Marshfield tight-end was one of the players the Eagles didn't want to see leave the state.

Right up until he signed his letter of intent to go to Northwestern last Wednesday, Worley was still fielding calls from college coaches hoping he would change his mind at the last season.

But, the senior tight-end -defensive end stayed true to his verbal commitment.

"I've always wanted to play in the Big Ten," said Worley, whose father, Jack, is the Cohasset recreation director. "They have great academics and I liked the new coaching staff. I wasn't going there just because of the head coach."

Worley made his decision after attending a football camp at Northwestern University, which is located in Evansville, a suburb of Chicago, Ill.

"I really fell in love with the place," said Worley last fall. "Then I went out there for the Michigan game and that clinched it for me."

While he played both tight-end and on the defensive line for the Rams, Worley will be starting out of offense for new head coach Randy Walker. The Wildcats are expected to use multi-tight end sets and that increases the opportunity that Worley will get a chance to play early in his college career.

"I'm looking forward to playing tight-end and I'm going to work hard in the off-season," he said.

deal to finally get over that hump," said Littauer. "I'm glad that I was able to be a part of the team that finally was able to take down Carver and get a banner to hang in the gym."

"They've had the advantage for so long that it was just a great feeling to finally come out on top of things," said Justin Golden. "We had a lot of confidence this season and were ready to put an end to the streak."

According to head coach Torin Sweeney, the Carver victory this season was more because of the little things rather than one overriding reason.

"We've had some great teams over the years, but each time it seemed that Carver would always have that one X factor that would give them the edge," said Sweeney. "This time we around we had the edge."

Familiarity could be a big reason for that edge. Littauer, Caldwell and Baird have all been with the wrestling program since the seventh grade and grapplers like Golden, Mike Rossi and J.P. Laugelle were not far behind them at all.

"People always said that when we were seniors, this was going to be a good team," said Littauer. "We've been together for so long now that it could have done anything but help us along the way."

"This is a culmination of all the hard work we've done over the years more than anything else," said Caldwell. "All of us have been working hard in the weight room and on the mats and that all of that work has finally paid off.

"You could see a couple years ago that we were going to be a very solid team as we matured. There was a little pressure on us, but I think we've lived up to the expectations that were put in front of us."

Sweeney said that some of those wrestlers that started with the squad five and six years ago have fallen along the wayside, but it was still obvious that the senior group was going to be something special when it got to be their chance to take the spotlight.

"Experience was really the key this season to our success," said Sweeney. "You could see all along the way that this was a great core of kids that could get the job done at the state level. And they have."

Worley keeps his word to Wildcats

When he entered Marshfield High , it didn't take the staff long to figure out Worley was going to be something special.

"I've known Eric since he was in the eighth grade," said Ram athletic director Ed Miller. "He is the type of kid who you want your son to be like. He thinks about his team first, his teammates second and then about himself.

"He's outstanding student, a leader in the school."

Marshfield High principal Peter Deftos echoed Miller's comments about Worley.

"Eric has been model student," said Deftos. "We look forward to watching him in college."

After he signed the scholarship, Worley still couldn't believe that he was going to playing college football.

"When I was a freshman, I never thought this would happen," he said. "I've always wanted to play in the Big Ten and this is unbelievable."

At least, that's the hope for the first Rams Tournament, which will be held in Marshfield on Tuesday, Feb. 16 and Wednesday, Feb. 17.

"We hope to make this an annual tournament with the location going from school to school every year," said Marshfield coach Paul Wholey. "We want to make this a good local tournament which will draw people's interest. I'm really looking forward to it."

Hingham, who went into the week battling for a state tourney spot, will open with Cohasset at 6 p.m., while Marshfield will play South Shore League champion Norwell at 8 p.m.

"Cohasset might be the best 4-11 team in the state," said Hingham coach Ged Phelan. "(Cohasset coach) Ron Ford prepares his team to play as well as anyone. Ron does a great job with his team."

BSC's annual pitching and hitting clinic

The Bridgewater State College baseball team will hold its 11th annual pitching and hitting clinic from Saturday to Monday, Feb. 13 to 15. The clinic will be divided into two groups that participate in a two-hour session each of the three days.

The clinic director is BSC head baseball coach Rick Smith, who is now in his sixth season as head coach for the Bears. He was a fifth round draft choice of the St. Louis Cardinals in 1973.

The BSC pitching and hitting clinic is open to all boys between the ages of 8-18. Participants will be grouped by age and/or skill level. Both individual and team instruction will be given for offensive and defensive skills. An abundance of drills and station work will be used to develop the "all around" baseball player.

Special guests at the three-day clinic include former minor league stars Paul Rappoli and John Graham. Graham is currently an assistant coach for the Bridgewater State College baseball program.

The clinic fee is $75. To receive a clinic brochure and an application with further information regarding the clinic, call the Bridgewater State College athletic office at (508) 697-1352.

Searching for that one big break on ice

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

It's kind of like "Star Search" on skates.

That is except for the fact that nobody ever sings or tells jokes unless they're inside the locker room, the junior dance competition has been all but eliminated and if you're skating with your head down someone who looks like Ed McMahon may just take that opportunity to crunch you into the boards.

But for these members of the Bay State Breakers junior hockey league team there is a goal at the end of the rainbow. Whether it be an extra look from some college scouts or maybe a chance to hook on with a minor league hockey team, a number of local icemen have forsaken their high school team for the chance to play with the Rockland-based hockey team.

"We do our very best not to take high school kids, but we get a lot of kids who want to come and play with us because it might increase their visibility with college scouts and could very well lead to the opportunity for them to pick up a college scholarship that maybe they wouldn't have been able to if the scout hadn't seen them playing with us," said the Breakers head coach David McCauley, a Marshfield resident.

The Breakers play a pro-like 70-game season that takes them from the opening practice sessions in mid-August all the way through to the beginning of March with stops along the way in places like Lake Placid, N.Y. and ice rinks all over New England.

Drawing most of their players from the surrounding South Shore area, McCauley said that most of his charges are talented kids just out of high school who were not heavily recruited at graduation and need a place to showcase their ability and possibly draw some interest from local colleges.

A number of local hockey players looking to improve their chances at getting a college scholarship or an invite to play with a minor league hockey team have hooked on with the Bay State Breakers, a junior hockey team that plays out of the Rockland Rink. Here, an assistant coach gives defenseman Brian Callahan a couple of tips as he awaits his next shift.

In general, the concept of junior hockey has taken off like a rocket across the country, especially out west and in the Southern states where drawing 10,000 to 12,000 fans to a tournament game is not an uncommon occurrence.

"The level of play in junior hockey is outstanding," said McCauley, comparing it more towards solid college competition rather than high school hockey. "In junior hockey every kid who steps on the ice has talent of some form and many of these kids are more focused on the game than they were in high school because they want to impress people and get noticed.

"Some kids have a hard time adjusting to the play at this level," added McCauley. "The tempo of the play is much faster and the game itself is much more physical that what they are used to playing."

"I noticed the difference right away," said John Walsh, a 20-year-old forward from Weymouth. "You immediately have to pick up your speed and your intensity at this level or you're going to find yourself behind the play and getting run over."

In his first full year with the Breakers, Walsh came to the team to try and arrange some financial help for college through his hockey skills. He's already heard from scouts from such places as Manhatanville College, Westfield State and Cortland State.

"It's much more competitive hockey, overall" said Walsh. "There's a lot more on the line for the players. A normal high school kid is playing hockey because it's fun. Here you are playing for a bigger goal and trying to take yourself to the next level."

Two skaters who decided to forgo a chance to play with their high school teams this season to join up with the Breakers are Abington's Scott MacDonald and Cohasset's Brad Powell.

"I get harassed a little at school a little bit by my friends about not playing for the high school team, but I'm happy with the choice I made," said MacDonald, the 6'3, 195 pound defenseman. "I wanted to get the college scouts to notice me and I thought that I could get more exposure playing with the Breakers than with the high school team.

"I knew that I'd get more out of it if I came to play here with the Breakers."

Powell is in a little different position that MacDonald in that Cohasset High went a long way in making the decision for him when they dropped hockey as a varsity sport last year when Powell was a sophomore. Although it was reinstated this season to varsity status for this season, it was obvious to Powell that he would have to go elsewhere to get his hockey skills noticed.

And, according to McCauley, Powell's skills on the ice are numerous.

"Brad's young, but he's made the transition to junior hockey very smoothly," said McCauley. "There are a lot of big time college programs that are going to want to take a long look at him for their team. Schools like Boston University and Lowell have already been in contact with Brad and come to see him play so it looks like he's got a bright hockey future ahead of him."

"There's such a big difference when you come up to junior hockey," said Powell. "The pace of place is much quick and the hitting is intense. I had a lot of trouble last season but the year of experience has been a great to me."

Silver Lake graduate Brian Callahan is another skater looking to create an opportunity for advancement with the Breakers. The 19-year-old Pembroke resident is taking classes at Massasoit Community College while hoping to attract the attention of a college scout.

"I'm trying to prove myself as a player," said Callahan. "Things didn't work out for me at the high school in regards to getting a scholarship so I'm just trying to play my game and get someone to notice me."

Other locals who have found a home with the Breakers include Brian Margetts (Hingham), Heath Heinz (Cohasset), Kevin Williams (Scituate), R.J. O'Neil (Braintree), Rich DeLisle, Matt Arnold, Kyle and Matt Desmarais and Jason Urquhart (all from Duxbury), as well as Mike Cahill and Joe Keefe (Pembroke)

The state of the Cohasset Skipper nation

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

In the early 90's, the years of Bird, Parish, and McHale, if a Boston sports fan had speculated that the Patriots would soon be better than the Celtics, he would have been laughed out of fandom. Nonetheless, a few years later, the Tuna-led Patsies were a Super Bowl team, while the Celtics floundered under M.L. Carr.

Sports at Cohasset High School are similar. The boys' basketball team, not long ago a powerhouse and threat for the state title, lugs a 4-12 record. In contrast, the wrestling team has blossomed, posting a 17-2 record in match competition (see other article.) The switch (in wrestling terms, a reverse) belies a bigger issue.

With the perennial bolt for private schools increasing and other factors pressing, the success of Skipper Nation has been minimal lately. Last year, the only two teams which made their respective tournaments were field hockey and girls' tennis.

This past fall, the football team experienced a resurgence when they posted a .500 record and beat Hull on Thanksgiving, but twelve key seniors graduate in the spring. Both soccer teams finished with losing records and the gymnastics squad was forced into joining forces with Norwell in order to field a team.

As mentioned above, the roundball program has been a victim of this trend. Coach Ford squeezed the talent out of this year's edition like toothpaste from a tube, but could only come up with four victories thus far.

The players themselves are certainly not to be blamed; few teams work harder in games, dive to the floor more, or put in a greater physical effort. Fan support for the Skippers this year has been remarkable; a large contingent even traveled to Hull's dingy gym on Friday night. Senior captain Jamie DeMichele was voted, unanimously, by the coaches of the South Shore League to represent Cohasset and the SSL at Friday night's All-Star game in Norwell.

Thanks largely to the efforts of Health Coordinator Mike Gill, a state of the art facility has been installed at CHS, complete with squat racks, dumbbells, and a nifty little contraption called "the FreeRunner." Athletes have been given the opportunities to train more efficiently and many have taken advantage of that.

What's to blame? Who's to blame? I wrote an article last winter which sang the praises of CHS athletes and their accomplishments. Judging by win-loss records over the past two years, I'd be forced to eat my words.

Are our athletes becoming too specialized, too focused on one sport? Some say yes, that athletes are encouraged at a young age to become very good at one thing, not pretty good at a lot of things. But a look at the school's most successful team, wrestling, refutes that argument.

Most wrestlers play at least one other sport, and many play all three seasons two.

Undoubtedly, students fleeing Massachusetts' Education Reform have brought much of the town's talent to private, parochial, and vocational schools. More students hold jobs than in past eras. Whatever the reason, it's baffling and, frankly, frustrating.

Here's hoping that this slump is just that: only a slump. Yogi Berra said, "Hope springs eternal. And we play baseball then, too." With the wrestling team making a stretch drive and sending many of its members on to individual competitions at the sectional and state levels, a strong close to the winter season seems likely.

And both baseball and girls' tennis appear to be likely candidates for the postseason. The Skippers have time to turn this year around and make Skipper Nation a happy place once more.

Sylvia's 300 reasons for coaching success

By Mike Hardman
STAFF WRITER

How's about another 300 wins? Jim Sylvia chuckled when he was asked the question.

"I don't know about that," he said.

With a 10-1 win over Rockland on Jan.30, the Hanover High hockey coach cracked the coaching milestone, moving into the legendary status.

Sylvia has been the Indians' coach for the last 22 years and he shows no signs of letting up.

"I still like watching the puck go into the other team's net," he said with a smile, "and I don't like watching it go into our team's net."

For a lot of Sylvia's years, his longtime assistant coach Doug Smith has been by his side. Smith didn't play hockey at Hanover, but he had professional stints in both the International League and the American Hockey League as well as other professional leagues as a player.

"He's not going to stop anytime soon," said Smith with a laugh. "I'm never going to get a chance to be a head coach here."

He is kidding about wanting to be the Indians' head coach. When he thinks about it, Smith doesn't think he would be around if Sylvia decided to hang up his coaching clipboard.

"I'd quit with him," said Smith. "I've played professional hockey and he is better than the coaches there. He just knows the game so well. He knows every angle. Jim Sylvia is a smart guy."

In type Sylvia fashion, he steered the reasons for 300 wins away from himself towards his team.

"We have a lot of tradition here," said the coach. "There have been a lot of great players. Like I said before you show me a coach with 300 wins and I'll show you a coach who's had good kids to work with. I've also had great assistant coaches, like Doug Smith, Bob Hone, John Houghton, Butch Fonseca and Scott Crowley. Dougie has been with me the longest. That has a lot to do with it."

Since he started coaching in 1973, Sylvia has instilled discipline and a sense of pride into the program.

"When you put on a Hanover High hockey jersey it means something," said Sylvia. "You are always part of the program after you graduate. We had former captains here today and they are always welcomed to come back to skate with the team and I have them talk with the team about the tradition. They are all part of this.

"We've had a lot of families come through the system. We have that family tradition. They are trying to live up to what it means to wear the jersey."

When his team won Sylvia's 300 on Saturday, he shared the moment with one of his former players, Rockland coach Barry Parker. His team gave him a game puck and a plaque honoring his accomplishment. There was also a sign pressed against the glass at the Hobomock Arena thanking Sylvia.

"It was very emotional in the locker room," said Smith. "It doesn't happen often (a coach winning 300 games). He has had the longevity and success. We play 20 games a year and you have to win 17 or 18 games a year to get that point. It's an amazing, great record. He is a winner and has brought the dedication and desire to the program."

Smith says Sylvia ability to instill discipline to his team has been a big reason for his success, but it goes beyond that.

"He's like a drill sergeant," said Smith, "but he can also be your best friend. If you are having a problem, he is there to help you. It's like having a second father."

Outside of the Hanover locker room, Sylvia accepted congratulations from the fans, rink workers and his former players. Norwell High coach Tim Murphy stopped by after his team lost to Abington to tell Sylvia that the Indians had clinched the first Pilgrim Conference and to congratulate Sylvia on his 300th.

"We've won a lot of South Shore League titles, but this is our first Pilgrim title," said Sylvia. "That was a classy thing for Tim to do. There are a lot of great guys coaching in this league."

> "He is a winner and has brought the dedication and desire to the program."
> HANOVER HIGH ASSISTANT COACH DOUG SMITH ON HEAD COACH JIM SYLVIA

And they all want to be like the Hanover coach.

"Jim Sylvia is Hanover hockey," said Smith.

Hopefully, it will stay that way for a long time.

"I feel a strong love for the game," said Sylvia.

And his players showed a strong love for him on Saturday.

That's part of the tradition of Hanover hockey, something Sylvia hopefully won't get tired of talking about until he wins his 600th game.

Ice Chips:

With their 5-1 win over Whitman-Hanson on Saturday, the Marshfield Rams gain entrance into the post-season. With their solid goaltending and strong defensive play, coach Jack Crowley's club could be tough in the state tourney. In their last six games, the Rams have given up five goals. Nick Rubbo had a 1.14 goals against average going into this week, while Phil Belmont had a 2.65 average..

Senior defenseman Bruce Nobles has bounced back from after missing his junior year with a knee injury with a solid season. He scored his first goal of the year against Dennis-Yarmouth in an 8-1 win.

Going into the week, Billy Oberg was the top scorer with 10 goals and 18 assists for 28 points, while John Schorle and Jon Kadish each had 26 points.

Duxbury would be a good bet for the Division 2 title. It will be hard for opposing teams to stop their explosive first line of Bob Zarella, T.J. Wigmore and Tom Daniels, who entered the week as the top three scores in the Atlantic Coastal League. Zarella was in Eastern Mass with 24 goals and 28 assists for 52 points.

If that wasn't enough, the Green Dragon have the best keeper in the ACL in Greg Norcross, 1.53 goals against average.

The only team to beat Duxbury was the Hingham Harbormen, who play an independent schedule.

When the post-season starts, you can be sure that Norwell's Matt Petty will be a marked man. He has been on fire all year long for the tourney-bound Clippers with 20 goals and 10 assists going into the win. Teammate Rob Himberg has also been a scoring machine for the Clippers with a 11 goals and 15 assists.

If there was one of those NHL type hardest shot competitions, Rockland's Mike Casagrande would be a good choice for top honors. The senior has a shot that has been terrorizing opposing goaltenders for years.

Hanover's Marc Barron's name is on list of the scouting bureau as one of the top high school keepers. He entered the week with a 1.40 goals against average.

Pre-tourney tournaments will be the focus this week. Hanover is taking part in a tourney in Martha's Vineyard on Feb. 13-14, while Hingham will be traveling to Falmouth on Feb. 15-19. Besides Falmouth, who is the top team in the Old Colony League, the Harbormen will also be up against the likes of Arlington Catholic and BC High.

Taking a look at eye safety

By Esther Csapo Rastegari,
CORRESPONDENT

They come in a rainbow assortment; each pair unique. Precious, we only get one set.

But, do we really know how to protect them? All too often, we take our eyesight for granted. But, statistics show that risky behavior may be setting us up for eye injury or blindness. Whether at work or at home, with our families or friends, indoors or in the sun, we need to put eye safety at the top of our "to do" list.

According to the U.S. Department of Labor, there are about 1,000 eye injuries daily in the workplace. About 100,000 will result in temporary or permanent loss of vision. Labor statistics estimate that 3 out of 5 people injured were not using any eye protection, and that 40 percent of those who did, did not use the right kind.

Simply, most eye injuries are avoidable. If you have to handle harmful materials, or could be at risk for splashing liquids or flying objects or particles, make sure you follow all the proper safety procedures. Always wear protective eye gear that is labeled "ANSI Z-87," indicating it meets occupational safety standards of the American National Standards Institute. Polycarbonate lenses are stronger and more impact-resistant than plastic and glass. Your own prescription glasses or contacts are not designed to protect against eye damage. You can, however, get industrial lenses in your own prescription. If you get injured, make sure you know where to go and what to do. Is there a shower near your workstation to flush chemicals off your skin or eyes? Delay can cause a minor injury to become more serious, so know what you'll do before it happens.

If your work is at a computer terminal, you won't damage your eyes, but you can suffer eye strain and fatigue. Every 30 minutes or so, be sure to look away from the screen and focus on something far away. This relieves the strain. Home.

Think you're safe at home? Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary estimates 27 percent of eye injuries occur at home. Some danger zones: home construction work, auto repair, and chemical use both inside and outside the home. Use "ANSI Z-87" protective eye gear at home as well as at work.

Make sure power equipment is in good working order with no loose parts. Limit the amount of chemicals brought into the house. Use the least toxic chemical needed to do the job. Never use a flame — such as a lighter — around chemicals that are flammable. If fumes are possible, work in a well-ventilated area. Not only can the fumes be toxic, but they could cause you to become disoriented and less safety-conscious. In case of a chemical splash into the eye, rinse immediately for 10 to 15 minutes with clear water. Seek medical attention right away if burning or pain persists. While you may be tempted to rub the eye, don't. It could cause further damage.

According to the American Academy of Ophthalmology, a million children a year suffer eye injuries. Injury is the leading cause of blindness in children, yet about 90 percent of injuries are preventable. A hard blow to the head, from a fall or a sports injury can result in retinal detachment. Eyes can be injured with falls, so avoid scatter rugs and provide good lighting. When buying new furniture, choose those with rounded rather than sharp corners. Pad sharp corners on existing furniture with young children in the house. With young children, use gates at the top and bottom of all stairs.

The volunteer agency Prevent Blindness America estimates that 11,000 pediatric eye injuries are due to toys and home playground equipment. Many toys have dangerously sharp points, and are frequently used as projectiles. Throw away broken toys. Avoid darts, arrows and BB guns. The American Association for Pediatric Ophthalmology and Strabismus states that BB guns are a leading cause of serious eye injuries in children.

More than 40,000 people seek emergency room care each year for sports-related eye injuries. Add to that the number treated in doctor's offices and outpatient clinics, and the total number of injuries mushrooms. Prevention is definitely the key. Sports involving balls and rackets are the most common causes of injuries. Sports-related eye injuries are often caused by a blow to the head, not just by injuring the eye directly. Baseball is the leader in eye injuries in the 5-year-old to 14-year-old range. The simple use of protective head gear — helmet and face shield —can eliminate most injuries. Make sure coaches stop kids playing around with swinging bats and enforce safety gear use. Regular prescription eyewear is not protective. Be sure to use sports eyeguards for yourself and your children. Balls, rackets, elbows and fingers can all damage eyes.

While goggles are sufficient for most water sports to protect against chlorine or bacteria, polycarbonate eye protectors should be used when playing water polo. When outdoors, flying dust or dirt can scratch the cornea if the eyes are unprotected.

If your eye gets hit, apply a cold compress (even a cold drink can) to the eye, without pressure for about 10 - 15 minutes. This should lessen the pain and swelling. If your vision becomes blurred, or pain continues, seek medical attention right away.

To get rid of dirt, sand or dust, rinse the eye with clean water. Lift the upper lid over the bottom lid. Blink to let the tear wash the particles out. If unsuccessful cover the eye for comfort (with a clean cup, or a scarf) and seek medical attention.

If you suspect the eye has been cut, do not rinse, as this could cause bacteria to enter into the eye's sterile fluid and cause an infection. Do not try to remove something that is stuck in the eye - get medical care right away.

If a chemical splashes into the eye, rinse with clean water for 10 to 15 minutes. If water isn't available, use soda, or any other non-irritating liquid. Seek immediate medical attention.

Don't assume an eye injury is "minor." Check with a health practitioner as soon as possible even after smallinjuries to be sure that the injury is not continuing to worsen unnoticed.

Resources: Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary has a great pamphlet on preventing eye injuries. Call 617-573-3340 for more information. American Academy of Ophthalmology web site www.eyenet.org offers an excellent teacher's guide with detailed lesson plans on eye safety.

LIBRARY CORNER

Calling all volunteers!

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is looking for dedicated volunteers to help behind the main desk during the evening hours. The library is open Monday, Tuesday and Thursday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Saturday from 2 to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. The library is closed Wednesday.

Magazines galore

After a special survey conducted by the library, a list of all the magazines available at the Paul Pratt can now be requested through the front desk. The library now subscribes to 138 adult magazines ranging from Architectural Digest to Yankee Magazine and 16 magazines for children to young teens from American Girl to Zoobooks. Come in and enjoy them with the whole family!

A grateful donation

A new word processor has been generously donated by Cohasset resident Carol Bonnar. A Compaq Presario with Microsoft Office, including Word, Excel, Power Point and Access is now available for the public use during library hours.

Sign up for the computer is not required at this time, but users will be limited to one hour or less if someone is waiting. All files and documents created must be saved to your own floppy disk. The printer provided is a black and white high quality HP laserjet .

Thank you to the Bonnar family for this wonderful contribution to the library!

IT'S HAPPENING

Special screening at Art Center

As part of Sundays at the Center, the South Shore Art Center will present a screening of the film "The 5,000 Fingers of Dr. T." This live-action Hollywood film was an early production of Stanley Kramer, scripted and designed by Theodore Geisel before he became famous as Dr. Seuss! The plot of "5,000 Fingers" concerns a young boy, Bart Collins, being raised by a single mother. The boy is taking piano lessons from a very demanding teacher, Dr. Terwilliker. One day while practicing, Bart falls asleep at the keyboard and has a dream in which he is imprisoned in the crazed Dr. Terwilliker's palace and forced to prepare a recital with 499 other boys — hence the 5,000 fingers at Dr. T's command.

As an extra added attraction pianist Roger Miller of Quincy will perform briefly before the movie. Miller has been active nationally in the alternative music scene since 1978.

Miller's touring schedule is so busy that he is rarely available in his home area, but, because "The 5,000 Fingers of Dr. T" is just about his favorite movie, he has agreed to come and perform a few of his compositions as well as the theme music to the film before the screening begins. He will "prepare" the piano for his own pieces by affixing objects to the strings, transforming the piano into an exotic drum orchestra.

The screening is presented in collaboration with the SoBo Society. Admission will be $4 for adults and $2 for children, with free popcorn. Don't miss this wacky, whimsical afternoon for adults as well as children six and older, at 3 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 21.

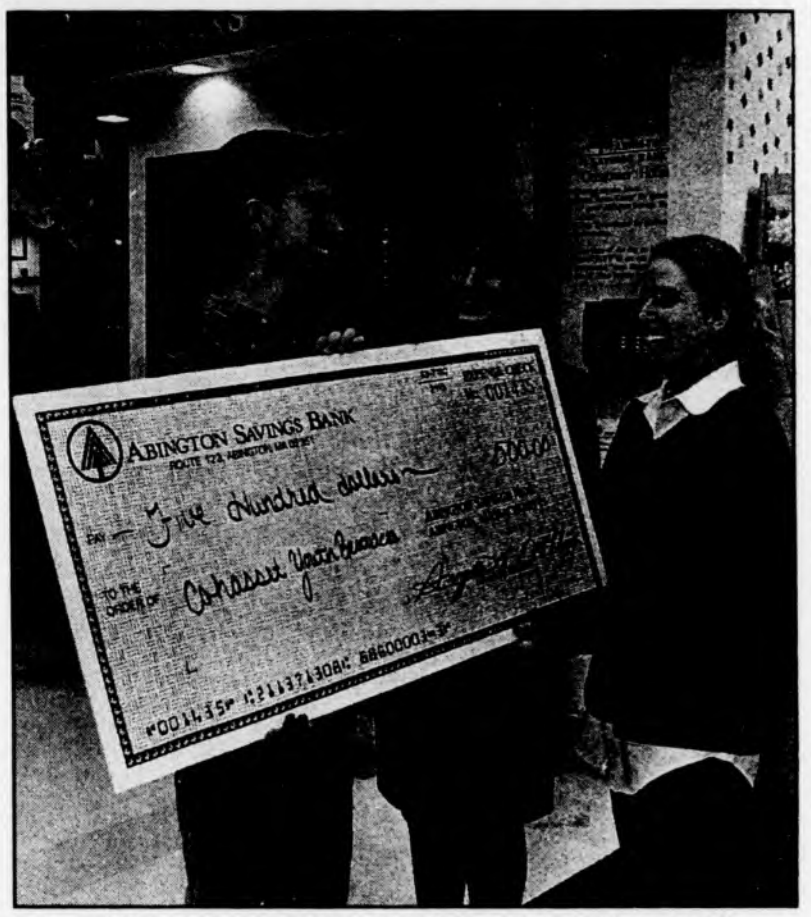
Teens benefit from Abington Savings Bank donation

"Helping local teens" is the aim of a recent donation made by Abington Savings Bank to Cohasset Youth Resources. Angela McHugh, sales manager for Abington Savings Bank's Cohasset branch, presented a $500 check to Jami Butman and Tony Bramblett, Cohasset High students, who have worked for the past two years to turn the old public works garage at 89 Rear S. Main St. into a teen recreation center. Scheduled to open in March, the center will be known as The Garage.

"There was a need for a place where older teens can get together in town," said Jami, who, along with Tony, has led a group in raising more than $20,000 for the ongoing project. The transformation of the building is being accomplished with help from the Cohasset Recreation Department.

The donation is part of Abington Savings Bank's ongoing support for South Shore causes involving children and teens.

"Our community relations effort is devoted to causes that help shape tomorrow's adults," said James P. McDonough, president of Abington Savings Bank. "We're especially pleased to support the teen center in Cohasset, because the kids themselves have been the driving force behind making the center a reality."



Cohasset High students Tony Bramblett (left) and Jami Butman (right) accept a $500 check from Sales Manager Angela McHugh at the Abington Savings Bank's Cohasset branch. The donation will go toward the teen center due to open in the former DPW garage in March.

Abington Savings' Cohasset branch is located in Shaw's Supermarket on Route 3A. Abington Savings Bank is a $591-million, state-chartered savings bank with headquarters in Abington and other branches in Halifax, Hanson, Holbrook, Hull, Kingston, Pembroke, Randolph and Whitman.

OBITUARIES

Winston O. Burgess

Winston O. Burgess, 81, of Cohasset, died Feb. 5 at South Shore Hospital, South Weymouth.

Mr. Burgess was born in Virginia and attended Fork Union Military Academy and the University of Richmond. He served in the Navy in the Atlantic during World War II on the admiral's staff as chief communications officer. As a lieutenant commander, his last tour of duty was at the Harvard Naval Training School as a communications instructor.

Mr. Burgess started his career in the textile business with the Bachman Uxbridge Worsted Company in Uxbridge. He was both a buyer and seller of wool as well as various types of wool cloth. During the early 1960s he worked for J.P. Stevens in New York before returning to Massachusetts in 1965 and settling with his family in Cohasset. At that time, Mr. Burgess was vice president of sales of the former Top Company in Boston. He worked for Brickle and Sons of Woonsocket, R.I. until he was 75.

He was a member of the Boston Wool Trade and the First Parish in Cohasset. An avid golfer, he was a member of the Cohasset Golf Club. He also loved music and vegetable gardening.

Husband of the late Jean Walsh Burgess, he is survived by two daughters, Beverley Burgess of Scituate and Jean Botts of Clifton, Va.; a son, Winston O. Burgess Jr. of Westboro; a brother, Ernest P. Burgess of Richmond, Va.; five grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

A memorial service will be held Tuesday, Feb. 16 at 3 p.m. at First Parish in Cohasset.

Donations may be made to First Parish, 23 Main St., Cohasset, MA 02025 or to the American Cancer Society.

Rosalie Ramseyer Reed

Rosalie Ramseyer Reed, 93, of Cohasset, died Feb. 4 in Cohasset.

Born and raised in Boston, her great-grandfather, Conrad Rueter, donated to the City of Boston much of the land which now comprises Frederick Law Olmstead's Emerald Necklace. She graduated from Thayer Academy in 1923, the New Conservatory of Music in 1927, and the Museum School, Museum of Fine Arts in 1930.

An accomplished pianist, she began her career with a concert, mainly of Chopin, at Jordan Hall in 1927. Later, after her marriage to the late Col. Darrell L. Reed, she turned her attention to jazz and entertained officers and enlisted men in the Far East in the immediate post-war years.

Col. Reed was aide to Gen. Douglas MacArthur, governor of occupied Japan. Mrs. Reed and her husband were stationed there, in Guam and the Philippines. Returning to the United States in the early 1950s, she lived in Florida, Kansas, New York, Pennsylvania, and Southern and Northern California where Col. Reed was commander of the Bakersfield Air Force Base.

Through her training in the Fine Arts at the Museum School, Mrs. Reed became assistant to Brancini, a noted Boston society photographer in the 1920s. She maintained her interest in the arts and became something of an expert in Japanese art.

Vivacious and attractive, Mrs. Reed made many friends of every generation throughout her long life.

She is survived by a nephew, David H. Burnham and his wife, Frances, of Cohasset; a great-niece and great-nephew, Amery A. and Hugh T.R. Burnham, both of Cambridge; her sister, Marjorie R. Fulton (Mrs. Harold E.) of Mission Viejo, Calif.; and several cousins.

Donations may be made to Thayer Academy.

Burial will be private on Friday at the National Cemetery. There will be a private memorial service later in the month at Emmanuel Church in Boston.

Love springs eternal in Cohasset

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Jane and Edward Sons of Beechwood Street, married eight years: "We're only in our eighth year," said Jane Sons, about the marriage that began on a ballroom dance floor. "We met while ballroom dancing eight years ago. We're both widowed twice and we went out dancing and didn't realize that we were probably getting married. We're still dancing. We met at the VFW in Cohasset. My husband is an excellent polka dancer and I just wanted to learn how to dance so I went there to learn and never thought I'd end up getting married. We met in September and we were married the next April. We endorse marriage. It's better than living together. I think the secret to a happy marriage is compromise. You can't always have it your own way."

Connie and Peter Tolman of Black Horse Lane, married 43 years: "We met in a friend's driveway while he was putting a new top on her car, and that was way back," said Connie Tolman, about the love of her life. We've been married for 43 years. We have three children, all grown up, of course. We were married in a year. The secret to a long marriage, for us, is that we like the same things, which certainly helps, and we don't argue much. We pretty much agree, but if we don't, I don't go around telling him he's wrong. All in all, we pretty much manage."

Phyllis and Stephen Leighton of King Street, 50 years in June: "I was working at a pharmacy in West Hingham and he was one of my steady customers," began Phyllis Leighton, remembering the "older man" that she fell for years ago. "I'm 12 years younger than he is and I had quite a crush on him since I was 16 or 17. We didn't start dating until I was 19—he thought I was 20—and we were married when I was 20. We've been married 50 years in June. The secret? Being friends and having your own space, I think."

Clark and Sallyann Chatterton of Red Gate Lane, married 35 years: These Cohasset High School sweethearts met while still in school. "I was in the class of '59 and Sallyann basically moved to town just when I was about to graduate," said Clark Chatterton. "We actually met at a mutual friend's wedding and then, believe it or not, we were married Thanksgiving Day—after the football game, which was sort of apropos. We just celebrated our 35th wedding anniversary on Nov. 28 to be exact. We have two children who are also a product of the town; born and raised here. Our daughter, Kim, is married to a local boy and my son, Troy, has been dating a local girl for six or seven years. Maybe he'll follow suit. The secret to a happy marriage? That's a tough one! Sallyann knows me like a book. How many wives will drive up to a person's place of work to say, 'Return your phone message!' She said, 'I'm not leaving until you return your call.'" Also, we both came from real strong families, which gives you a perspective on what it takes to have a strong marriage and family."

Local youths at risk

Drug, alcohol activity mirror national average

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The results of the latest Youth Risk Behavior Surveillance Survey given to Cohasset teens in grades seven-through-12 come as no shock to Health Education Coordinator Michael Gill. That's because in his 19 years serving the schools, the students risk behavior has basically mirrored state and national averages.

"This year's survey is pretty much the same as the others," said Gill. "There weren't a lot of surprises."

"Drug Proofing Cohasset" will feature guest speaker Richard Armour, a substance abuse and prevention specialist, who will speak at 7 p.m., March 2 in the Cohasset High School cafeteria.

For example, 30 percent of Cohasset High School students reported that in the month preceding the survey, they had gone riding in a car with a driver who had been drinking alcohol, compared to 37 percent nationally. And 39 percent of Cohasset High School students re-

Help hotline calls pick up

Bob Harold's volunteer hours at the drug help hotline on Tuesday evenings have been an exercise in, well, book-reading, for the most part.

Luckily, the tide has turned for the hotline's cool reception.

"I got three calls the other night and I gave them referrals to other places, so it's not a total loss," said Harold, who is a counselor at Faxon House Recovery in Quincy.

Last week, a visitor to St. Stephens Episcopal Church, visited Harold in the hotline room where he mans the phone. He sat with Harold and discussed his substance abuse problem. Harold referred him to Faxon House and was able to counsel him there.

"Substance abuse is a difficult issue to handle because you've got only a short time to

Making noise about diesel pollutants

O'Keeffe's TREQ takes center stage

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

For years Kevin O'Keeffe seemed to be standing on his environmental soapbox all alone.

Often unfairly pigeonholed as being anti-Greenbush, the Cohasset resident nevertheless spent countless hours researching and analyzing the polluting effects of diesel exhaust. O'Keeffe, an MIT graduate, shared the results of his studies with federal and state agencies, such as the MBTA, Army Corps of Engineers and Environmental Protection Agency.

"I think I have the civic obligation as an American to do something with what I have developed," said O'Keeffe, an environmental analyst.

Two weeks ago all his hard work seemed to pay off when the EPA allowed that O'Keeffe and the non-profit organization he co-founded, Technical Resources for Environmental Quality (TREQ), had made a significant discovery.

In a nutshell, O'Keeffe's studies conclude that diesel rail pollutes more than the cars it is supposed to replace, propelling the EPA to ask for a new environmental feasibility study on the Greenbush project to include air quality impacts.

Restoration of the Greenbush Line of the Old Colony Railroad was supposed to be mitigation for Boston's Central Artery/Third Harbor Tunnel project to offset the negative air quality effects of the additional cars the so-called "Big Dig" would attract.

The plagued 17-mile Greenbush Line — unlike its sister spurs to Plymouth and Middle-

Koed may seek seat on board of selectmen

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Fred Koed, 92 Pleasant St., is circulating papers for a chance at one of the two seats up for grabs on the board of selectmen. Chairman Ronnie McMorris and Selectman Nan Roth, who are both seeking reelection, took out papers several weeks ago.

The top two "vote-getters" will win the seats.

Koed, who served on the advisory committee and the Cohasset Housing Authority, took over the helm of the water commission in April, 1984 in the midst of a water crisis that specifically affected the Linden Drive area.

"Fortunately, people weren't angry at me for the situation," he said. "The next three years, I . a $2.5 million emergency plan to solve the problem."

Koed's decision to attend graduate school at the McCormick Institute at U. Mass/Boston for his MSPA (Masters in Science and Public Affairs) cancelled out a reelection bid to the water commission. His graduate work won't be done until mid-May, but he says that he is ready for the crunch leading to April election.

"I think that my experience as chairman of the advisory board and the water commission, as well as my five years with the housing authority will allow me to provide leadership," he said.

Other candidates joining the election include Mary "Betsy" Connolly, 431A King St.; Nancy B. Hertig, 124 Lamberts Lane and Stephanie Noble, 10 Joy Place.

Noble is circulating papers for a three-year term on the school committee. School committee chairman Richard Shea had also announced that he would not run for re-election.

Connolly and Hertig have taken out papers for a one-year term on the school committee. That seat was vacated by Joseph McElroy, who resigned earlier this month.

Anthony J. Carbone, 72 Church St., has taken out papers for a seat on the recreation commission. Shelanne S. Durkin is not seeking reelection.

Last week, Roger Whitley, 11 Cedar Lane, took out election nomination papers — joining incumbents Sheila Evans and Roger Lowe who

Lobster Lab receives sailboat

Completing a summer of activity, Dr. Kevin Ulmer, president of the Cohasset Lobster Lab, Inc., a Learning Laboratory for marine biology and genetic research which will occupy a building on the former Haggerty property at Parker Avenue, announced that a 20-foot Corinthian sailboat has been donated to the project and sold to help provide funds to renovate the Haggerty building.

The boat, moored in the harbor for many years, was used regularly for pleasure sailing in the locality. According to the donor, the gift is one way to help a worthwhile project on the waterfront. The boat was sold with the proceeds going to the Learning Laboratory.

The boat was sold to Tom Astley, and will be sailing out of the Cohasset Yacht Club where it will be berthed.

Gulf Association and Lobster Lab meet

The Gulf Association, Inc. and the Cohasset Lobster Lab held a joint meeting Feb. 10. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss means to engage citizens within the South Coastal watershed to become concerned about issues of encroaching pollution and concomitants to expanded growth within the area.

Speakers at the meeting were:

• George Zoto team leader for the Massachusetts' Executive Office of Environmental Affairs South Coastal Watershed Initiative. His talk covered Impact of growth on the watershed and means for managing it.

• Dr. Kevin Ulmer, chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health and President of the Cohasset Lobster Lab, Inc. who spoke about a Vision for Teaching our kids about Scientific Research as a means for stimulating thought about our environment.

A discussion followed which covered many of the issues Cohasset considers important as the second millennium approaches. An architect's model of the Lobster Lab was on display together with a placard detailing the Lab's achievements during its first year.

Eminent domain is out for water tank location

Plan is to buy land, share antenna rights

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Members of the water commission have been trying to decide for more than two years where they should build a new water tank. Last month, they decided to take an acre of land on Scituate Hill by eminent domain from the owner, J. Michael Susi and Sons. Now, the water commission has reversed that decision. Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said his board has struck a deal with Susi to purchase land for a 1.8 million gallon steel water tank and share future antenna rights for the top of the structure. McNabb is hopeful that the water commission and Susi can finalize the deal within a month.

The latest tank proposal would allow the water commission to build its tank without the prospect of a lawsuit by Susi to recover damages due to the eminent domain taking. Susi could not prevent the water commission from taking land by eminent domain. But company owners could sue the water commission for financial restitution if they didn't like the purchase price. In eminent domain takings, governments are required to pay fair market value based on independent appraisals for property seized. McNabb said Susi may also have planned to sue the commission over the rights to rent out antenna space on top of the tank to telecommunications companies.

"This solves two problems in one. Susi wanted antenna rights and we wanted a spot for the tank. We feel we have a deal in place, although we'll hold off until we nail down the legal paperwork."

— Water commissioner John McNabb

"This solves two problems in one," McNabb said. "Susi wanted antenna rights and we wanted a spot for the tank. We feel we have a deal in place, although we'll hold off until we nail down the legal paperwork."

Water users can expect to gain a benefit from the deal beyond having a second tank to improve water quality and pressure. The low cost of the new tank could leave the water commission with a cash surplus of as much as $500,000. The surplus could allow the water commission to keep rates stable.

McNabb said an independent appraiser has estimated the value of the land at $65,000 per acre. The water commissioners need only about 1/2 an acre of land for the tank. In a separate deal, the water commissioners may build an access road on 1/2 acre of land located on an adjacent property owned by Paul Barry through his Crocker II Realty Trust. McNabb said the commissioners are working on a deal with Barry to obtain the land for the road in exchange for providing him with two connection stubs from the water pipe that carries water from the tank to dwellings. The pipe would run directly under the access road. McNabb said the road would be 20-30 feet wide and several hundred yards long.

The water commission estimates the cost of building a 1.8 million gallon steel tank at about $1.065 million. The tank would be about 65 feet high and 70 feet in diameter. McNabb said the cost of building the tank could be even lower as companies bid on the project. The water commission has $1.6 million set aside for the tank. Previous estimates based on other locations placed the cost of the tank at about $1.6 million. McNabb said the savings from the current deal could be used to fund other projects and keep water bills at current levels. The water plant is in need of some upgrades and the water commission needs to continue its on-going project to clean and re-line existing pipes, McNabb said.

Other sites for a new tank are either more expensive or impractical. McNabb said Barry has offered the commission another site he owns, but the cost would exceed $1.3 million. A site owned by the Massachusetts Highway Department would be cheaper, but state officials have not been receptive to the idea. The town would need state permission to use the site. McNabb also fears that the state could take a long time before making a decision. The water commissioners originally wanted to build the second tank on Bear Hill next to the town's only other water container. But residents living in view of the tank opposed the proposal.

The location for the tank would be on one end of the property away from the area that Susi hopes to develop into residential homes of commercial space.

Joint school driveway a safety concern

Hurried parents illegally pass parked buses

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Speed bumps, an interim road or some minor reconfigurations might be warranted to reduce the safety hazard caused by some parents who are making pick-up and drop-off times at the new Joseph Osgood Elementary and Deer Hill schools hazardous.

When school building committee chairman Robert Spofford went before selectmen last week to request $244,000 to put in air conditioning and repair drainage problems at the new Osgood, he explained that $50,000 of that would go toward finding a solution to the driveway situation.

"Parents are using the driveway like a road; they won't slow down," he told selectmen. "I don't want to blow this out of proportion but people are finding it hard to go at the 15 mph limit on the driveway, which was built wide to accommodate traffic.

"But no one will get there sooner by going past a bus, because you're already in line behind it."

The problem is that some parents have been speeding, riding over lawns and illegally bypassing school buses in their hurry to be first in line to pick up their kids. But does the behavior of some warrant a $50,000 solution?

Voters will decide for themselves at the March town meeting when they weigh the $244,000 requested by the school building committee, but selectman Thomas Callahan already has an opinion.

"I'm alarmed to hear that parents are driving around the school bus and I can't see spending $50,000 to indulge people in their stupidity," he said. "Write some tickets for this and they'll get the message." Callahan supported all but the $50,000 request from the school building committee.

> "Parents are using the driveway like a road; they won't slow down."
> — Robert Spofford, school building committee

Safety Officer Richard Yocum has already warned parents to pay attention to traffic rules regarding parked school buses at the Deer Hill and Osgood schools. So far, police have been issuing warnings, but will soon start writing tickets which can carry a $200 fine.

Parent Adrienne McCarthy agreed with Callahan, and said that putting money toward reengineering the shared driveway entrance and roadway between the new Osgood and the Deer Hill schools is spending money that could go into the schools for the children because some parents are not concerned with other children or people around them.

Spofford said the school building committee has been trying to work out a solution. The committee met with the original engineer and architect to discuss whether or not the pick-up and drop-off areas for the schools is a flawed design.

Back in November, the PSO's Jane Pescatore — when she was asked to address the situation in a letter to the school committee and the school building committee — described the traffic flow problem at the Osgood and the poorly marked parking spaces and narrow parking lot at Deer Hill as "an accident waiting to happen."

Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan explained to selectmen that Osgood parents arrive at 2:30 p.m., which is when Deer Hill lets out, to pick up their Osgood children that leave school at 3 p.m. "The Osgood parents come early when we're dismissing our students because they want to get there early to line up," he said.

School superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said that the school committee had already discussed using signs, speed bumps and barriers and had even brought the police to the school, but parents continued to drive unsafely in the school driveway area.

Selectman Nan Roth suggested the purchase of speed bumps from reserve fund money to provide relief, but Town Manager Mark Haddad explained that Harold Litchfield of the DPW didn't want the bumps because they make plowing difficult.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris pointed out that weekly letters sent home to parents about putting their children on the bus instead of driving them has not changed the situation.

Selectman Diane Sullivan thought that parents might want to leave children off at an earlier point from which the children could continue their walk to school.

Selectmen reached a consensus to support the request. "On a matter of safety, you can't nickel and dime," said Sullivan.

"I think it was a productive meeting," said Spofford in a phone interview this week. "I think the selectmen understand more about what the driveway issue is; it's a combination of both configuration and irresponsibility of some drivers. People driving around the grass or buses is unconscionable. It's a shame that the traffic situation has detracted from the good things that are going on in that new school."

AROUND TOWN

NEW ARRIVALS

We begin this week by celebrating two brand-new wonderful Cohassetites — in order of appearance they are:

Michael Thomas Tesauro, who was born Jan. 25. Michael is the little brother of Madeleine, who just adores her brother. Of course, Mom and Dad, Catherine and Thomas J. Tesauro, do too! Michael's maternal grandparents, Pat and Jack McCleary, came to Cohasset from Michigan to "check him out" and, of course, they immediately fell in love with the little darling — between him, Madeleine and their love of Cohasset, they may not go home! And, Michael's paternal grandparents (also from Michigan) are due to arrive to "meet him" soon — every family member is coming for his baptism this month. That includes family from Chicago and Cleveland! What fun! Perhaps they will all fall in love with Cohasset as much as they will with Michael and Madeleine, and we'll have a whole new family branch here to stay!

Then came Jack Wesley Nee, who was born Feb. 2! All reports are that he is the handsomest little guy on Short Street! You just ask Dad, Coleman Nee and his Mom, Karyn Swaun, if you don't believe us! Jack weighed in at 7 pounds, 5 ounces, a big boy, indeed!

Jack and Michael will meet at the new Osgood School before their parents know it, hopefully we will hear more about them before then! Meanwhile, welcome to you both!

BELATED BIRTHDAY

Happy belated birthday greetings go to Jack DeLorenzo! As most of you know, Jack is the assistant principal at the Cohasset Middle/High School and a wonderful guy! You should have seen his office last Wednesday, balloon bouquets, cakes of every size and description, cards, the works! Just to let him know he is loved, and to recognize his special day! Hope it was a memorable one, Jack, you certainly deserve it! You are loved!

HARLEM ROCKETS

The Cohasset Permanent Fire Fighters # 2804 have some exciting news that they hope will entice you to watch — they will be playing against the Harlem Rockets Friday, March 5, at the Cohasset High School "Hot Sullivan" gym. The fun begins at 7:30 p.m., it will be a good time for young and old, so put it on your calendar right now! What a fun way to spend a night in March! More news about it later!

LIFEBOAT IN PBS SERIES

Did you catch it? The Cohasset Maritime Institute's surfboat, John Warren II, was included in an episode of the PBS series, "The American Experience" Feb. 15 at 9 p.m. (to be reshown Feb.18 at 11 p.m. on channel 2, and Feb. 21 at 11 p.m. on Channel 44.). The episode is "Rescue at Sea: Saved by the Wireless" and recalls the 1909 collision of two ships in a dense fog off Nantucket, and the documentary tells how 1,500 lives became dependent on a new technology: wireless telegraphy. The production company recreated the dramatic scenes using two rowing boats familiar to Cohasset Harbor: the Dragonfly, owned by Cohasset resident Michael McNabb and Cohasset Maritime Institute's own John Warren II. Members of the Board of Directors and the Maritime Program of the Hull Lifesaving Museum were outfitted in costumes and portrayed the hearty boat crews and distressed passengers. Hull Gut served as the back drop, and viewers will see a simulated gale (courtesy of the Hull Fire Department) and dense fog supplied by the production company. You may see some very familiar faces amongst the brave crew and frightened passengers!

HISTORY OF JOHN WARREN II

There's certainly one "friend" you won't have any trouble recognizing, the John Warren II. If you've ever rowed her, cheered on your son or daughter pulling an oar, helped refurbish her, painted the white stars on her signature blue oars, attended the 1991 re-launching, or seen her silently appear out of the fog in Cohasset Harbor at the Blessing of the Fleet, you'll recognize her! And, as you know, the John Warren II was named after the famous Cohasset lifeboat of the 1800s. The original boat was named after Dr. John Warren, a founding member of the Massachusetts Humane Society, the organization that founded the US Lifesaving Stations. It was extensively restored by students at Cohasset High School and with the financial support of many townspeople was re-launched in 1991. JWII became an integral component of the CHS curriculum and was used by a wide variety of students and adults for competition, educational expeditions in Massachusetts Bay, as well as recreational rowing.

COMMITTEE FORMED

So, there are zillions of reasons that you will want to watch this production, and to be proud of the Cohasset Maritime Institute (they are now leasing and restoring the antique Boat House on Parker Avenue: the restoration is well underway! And, in case you are wondering where the John Warren II is today, it is awaiting repairs at the Pemberton Point Boat House in Hull (in the lifesaving Museum). "Bring the John Warren Home" committee has been formed to bring it home to Cohasset Harbor with the singular goal of it once again rowing in the 1999 Cohasset Harborfest Blessing of the Fleet.

TAX DEDUCTIBLE!

So, watch the special, take pride in "our" boat, then, if you are as impressed as we think you will be, send a donation of time or a contribution to repair the JWII (estimates are $3,500). Your contribution in any amount can be made to CMI, c/o Cohasset High School, tax deductible! Or, if you know wooden boats (you know how much elbow grease they need), then please help to maintain it!

Hopefully you'll be able to see the PBS presentation; for the "Bring the John Warren Home" Committee information, call Jack Buckley at 383-8261 or Marie McCarthy at 383-6567.

Please call me with your news, okay?

Something different to cook, out of the ordinary!

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

Well, it's that time of year ...everyone is looking for something new to cook, something different, out of the ordinary! Why not have a few friends over, have a nice buffet! Take out your best china (why do we save it, anyway), your crystal glasses, everything that you treasure, and show it off to its best advantage!

I'll let you choose your favorite, be it beef, pork or ham — then I'll make these two suggestions to go with it! A Noodle Pudding Soufflé (a tasty buffet casserole that will become a frequent favorite, company or not), and Mustard Mousse (Sweet and tart, this mold brings out the flavor of beef, pork or ham).

Then, just make your favorite broccoli dish, a great salad, some crunchy rye bread and a light dessert — there you have it! Make plans for next weekend, and ENJOY!

Noodle Pudding Soufflé

1 (8-oz) pkg. med. noodles
Salted water
1/4 lb. butter, softened
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 pint cottage cheese (1cup)
1 pint sour cream (2 cups)
1/2 tsp. salt
2 tsps. vanilla extract
5 eggs
Cinnamon

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Grease a 13"x9" baking dish; set aside. In a large saucepan, cook noodles in boiling salted water to cover until tender, 8-10 minutes. Drain and set aside. In a large bowl, beat butter and sugar. Add cottage cheese, sour cream, salt and vanilla. Mix in eggs one at a time, beating after each addition. Stir in cooked noodles. Pour into prepared baking dish. Sprinkle top with cinnamon. Bake 50-55 minutes 'til golden brown. Let stand 5 mins. before cutting into squares. Makes 12 servings.

Mustard Mousse

1 envelope unflavored gelatin
1/4 cup lemon juice
4 eggs
3/4 cup sugar
3 tbsp. Dijon-style mustard
1/2 tsp. salt
1/2 cup cider vinegar
1/2 cup water
1/2 pint whipping cream, whipped
2 tbsp. chopped parsley

In a small bowl, sprinkle gelatin over lemon juice and let stand 5 mins. to soften. In a medium saucepan, mix eggs, add sugar, mustard, salt, vinegar and water. Beat 'til blended. Add gelatin mixture. Stir constantly over moderate heat until mixture begins to thicken; do not boil. Refrigerate until mixture is thickened and almost set. Oil a 4-cup mold; set aside. Fold whipped cream and parsley into thickened gelatin mixture. Pour into prepared mold. Cover with plastic wrap. Refrigerate several hours or overnight. This may be refrigerated up to 3 days. To unmold, run the tip of a table knife around the edges of the mold, dip bottom of mold in warm water and invert onto one of your very special platters. This makes 8 servings, and it is yummy!

Donations wanted

The Children's Room at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library welcomes donations of craft materials, especially yarn, construction paper, and colored cardboard. Please drop off any craft materials in the Children's Room and we thank you in advance.

In memory

The staff, library trustees and the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library regret to inform the public that Nancy Knight, 62, passed away Wednesday, Feb. 10. Nancy was a volunteer to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library for more than 30 years. Nancy was known in the library as the magazine organizer as well as being instrumental in processing books behind the scenes. This is a great loss not only to the library, but to the community she served so well. We will all miss her.

Greenbush and air quality

A local environmental analyst doing the calculations with limited resources from his home office in Cohasset has won the ear of the United States Environmental Protection Agency.

Through countless hours of research and working the numbers, Kevin O'Keeffe is single-handedly debunking the enormous perception that the train must be an air quality plus because of the number of cars it takes off the road.

The EPA acknowledges in its Feb. 8 letter to the Army Corps of Engineers — the lead federal agency over the Greenbush project — that Mr. O'Keeffe has a point.

"In addition to the oft-cited positive benefits from mass transit commuter rail, there are also negative air quality impacts from operation of diesel-fueled commuter rail," wrote Mindy Lubber of the EPA. "Planning agencies cannot assume that, simply because a project promotes alternatives to automobile commuter trips, it will necessarily result in overall cleaner air quality."

Diesel engines emit nitrous oxides or NOx that contributes to the creation of ground-level ozone which is nasty to breathe (see story page one). To comply with the federal Clean Air Act, the state must reduce NOx levels.

According to O'Keeffe's research, Greenbush train service with its massive locomotives would create "ozone precursor" emissions, such as NOx, equivalent to 1,000 diesel buses a day traveling through Cohasset Village.

This is significant on the local level because Greenbush is supposed to be mitigation for Boston's Central Artery/Third Harbor Tunnel project to offset the negative air quality effects of the additional cars the "Big Dig" would attract.

It also has national ramifications because emissions from diesel locomotives are a cause of respiratory illnesses — especially in densely populated urban areas where trains converge.

Ironically, Mr. O'Keeffe's history with the diesel engine started out on a positive note. He and an MIT colleague were interested in designing passive solar houses. In the process they tried to design diesel generator systems but soon realized the pollution implications of diesel engines.

Although he's been painted with the broad anti-train brush many times, Mr. O'Keeffe, who co-founded Technical Resources for Environmental Quality (TREQ), says he has no personal beef with the Greenbush Line. He is not an abutter to the tracks.

Greenbush is the object of his intense scrutiny because it is the project that is on the table at the moment. It's through Greenbush that Mr. O'Keeffe can make the larger point about the public health threat that he says diesel-powered engines create.

While Mr. O'Keeffe's findings aren't good news for the beleaguered Greenbush project — we agree with the EPA that they are worth considering when weighing the pros and cons of the train. We applaud Mr. O'Keeffe for his continued persistence in shedding light on the public health dangers of diesel exhaust.

Help for exchange student

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Teachers' Association recently learned that an exchange student living with a host family within the Plymouth County area has been diagnosed with Hodgkin's Disease, a form of cancer. The host family and the boy's parents decided that he would be able to receive more modern medical care in the United States than in his homeland, a former Soviet block country. The Cohasset Teachers' Association has made a donation to help defray the cost of this student's medical care, for which he has no medical insurance.

Interested readers may contact the Silver Lake Teachers' Association at 80 Learning Lane, Pembroke, MA 02354, to make donations.

Cohasset schools: high expectations-at what cost?

THE WAY I SEE IT

JOE MCELROY

Part II: Reviewing and Approving the Budget

The Cohasset School District needs the 9 to 10 percent operating budget increase that has been recommended by the School Committee. However, going forward, our schools must dramatically improve their prioritization and management processes. Otherwise, our students will be shortchanged and we are going to bankrupt the Town.

As a School Committee member, I was constantly re-entering the Superintendent's budget numbers on new spreadsheets, quantifying changes and analyzing them from different perspectives. The current budget detail does not indicate percentage changes. This is fundamental for any diligent budget review. Last week, I noted that our Policy Subcommittee endorsed establishing a budget calendar, tightly tracking spending trends, requiring School Committee approval for line-item transfers and pre-approval of hiring decisions. It's unconscionable that the Superintendent can create new positions and then come back to say that he is going to overspend the budget. Members from other districts were incredulous to learn that the Cohasset School Committee does not approve line-item transfers and hiring decisions.

When I became a School Committee member, we asked to receive the spending warrants in our reading packet so that we could review rather than "rubber stamp" them. Unfortunately, the description of expenditures remains very difficult to interpret. We also requested and received a tracking report on expenses. The tracking report does not project trends and is not adjusted for line item transfers; it is close to useless.

We confront a very serious situation. Why did we have a PhD teaching seventh grade art? Why do we offer three level of photography when we cannot fund technology? Can we justify athletic programs that cost quadruple others? Can we attract the "best and the brightest" when starting salaries are so low that we belatedly play catch-up by giving teachers four consecutive years of ten percent increases? Are senior teachers and administrators underpaid when we can identify 30 for FY00, who will be earning at least $60,000? Should teacher positions have value ranges similar to the private sector? In that way we might be able to offer salaries that would attract scarce technology, science and mathematics practitioners while paying less for more easily available skills.

Last year, supplemental changes to the District's FY98 operating budget increased its total to $7,780,410. The FY99 appropriation is $8,175,366, or a five percent increase. The FY99 budget is projected to be "in the red" about $350,000. Cohasset schools are two to four years behind on implementing a District-wide Technology program. Technology and the taxpayers will "take the hit" to make-up the shortfall.

Early first use of drugs - A serious risk factor for today's youth

The greatest risk factor for youth in determining an adult life of substance abuse is early first use of drugs and alcohol. Early first use of both drugs and alcohol poses a significant problem to the users as well as to society.

FROM THE D & A COMMITTEE

PAT MARTIN

Between the ages of 12 and 18 years of age, a child's brain is only two thirds developed. The two pound brain of a 12 year old will grow and rapidly add the remaining pound over the next six years and become fully developed by age 18. When a child is adding toxic substances to his or her body during this period, many of which are absorbed and remain for a lifetime in fat cells, they are, essentially, polluting their brains during a very critical stage of their mental development. Chemically the brain may begin to rely on these additives to function.

The period of adolescence, which is so difficult for many with its painful trials and tribulations, normally results in emotionally maturity and the development of character and coping skills. When a child starts a practice of releasing stress or pain through numbing drug use instead of through healthy release mechanisms such as physical activity, creative or verbal expression or thought analysis, they deny themselves the ability to develop the skills they will need for the rest of their life. As a result, they are likely to turn to drugs in their future years whenever coping is called for. For these two reasons, children who begin drug and alcohol use before 18 are significantly more likely to become addicted than those who begin use later in life.

Cigarette smoking commonly marks the groundbreaking for early drug use. Each year, 3,000 children in the U.S. become regular smokers. Smoking as few as 100 cigarettes in a lifetime can cause an addiction to nicotine and an inability to quit. Cigarettes are a "gateway drug". Smokers aged 12-21 years are three times more likely to use alcohol and thirteen times more likely to use marijuana than youth who never smoke.

Drinking alcohol follows after the gateway is opened to early use. Children are most likely to begin substance use by experimenting with alcohol in their own homes. The period immediately following school hours in cases when a child is left unsupervised is the time most common for first use. Wine coolers are drink of choice for experimenters. Five years ago the average age for first use of alcohol was 15, now its 12.

A variety of drug use then follows once the acceptance or pleasure of drinking among youth is established. Catching many parents off guard is inhalant use which has become very popular among younger children and beginners. The average age of use for this drug of choice is 13. Inhalants are inexpensive, readily available and commonly abundant around the house. Inhalant use was not as prevalent a decade ago and for this reason, many parents are unaware of its popularity, the signs and symptoms, and its imposing dangers. Popular inhalants include the propellant in Readi-Whip and fumes from petroleum based products such as magic markers, paint, air freshener and household cleaning solvents. Inhalant use can cause instant brain damage or death. They can also result in an addiction that is almost impossible to break.

Once again, parents need to be aware of the risks facing their children. Parents need to understand that today's children are using drugs and alcohol at ages younger than ever before. And, due to their youth, they are more significantly at risk of addiction than any generation before. Parents should become familiar with "messages or pressures" reaching their children and talk to them about drugs earlier than they might have originally considered. We recommend talking to your children by at least grade four and being knowledgeable enough about the issue as to not be considered "without a clue". Parents also need to know that kids who promise to never smoke, drink or do drugs before they reach adolescence may change their minds after adolescence.

HEALTH NOTES

The new on-site wastewater plan

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

On Thursday, Feb. 11, The Mariner, in an article said that the Health Board revives the Septic Management Plan, and that the language of the (town meeting) article is not significantly different from the plan proposed by the board in 1997. Nothing could be further from the facts.

The new plan may, at first blush, appear to resemble the previous plan, because much of its boiler plate (the legal provisions in it) use the same words as in the 1997 version. After all, the old version was prepared by SEA, Inc. at a considerable cost to the town and its provisions were researched with care and diligence. But the new plan is a far cry from the old.

In the first place, it's voluntary. No one need sign up for the plan unless he wishes to. No one will inspect anyone's septic system unless he wishes it or it is a clear public health threat to a neighbor or the environment. This means that if someone has a privy, and it doesn't bother anyone, he can continue to use it.

The plan will not cost the taxpayer anything. The town will charge those who have signed up for the plan a fee for maintenance and operation of his septic system, similar to the fee charged for wastewater processing by the sewer commission. Betterments will be paid for by the homeowner over 20 years. Zero percent interest loans are available from the State's Revolving Fund (SRF) account to which Cohasset will be entitled if the warrant article on next months warrant is passed. (Town Counsel and the Bonding Counsel have reviewed and approved the wording of the warrant article.) These loans will be available to all homeowners who have signed up for the plan. The town may charge up to 3/4% interest on the loan to cover administrative costs, but no more by law.

The plan contains a provision for credits (Septicredits) to anyone who permits perkable land which he owns to be used by others to process wastewater. This Septicredit provision is designed to encourage the use of perkable land for joint wastewater processing by a group of homes. For example, rather than expanding the central treatment plant, a group of homeowners near a plot of pervious ground owned by someone nearby could build a system for wastewater processing. The town would issue a credit in the form of an abatement to the owner for his wastewater processing fee.

The new wastewater management plan, far from being like the old one, will function like a utility, where the rate payer has his system operated and maintained by a contractor responsible to the town. He would pay the town a fee based on the total costs to the town, prorated by the number of homes which have signed up.

This plan has attracted much attention from the State which has asked Joe Godzik, the health officer, to give a paper on it at a forthcoming Health Forum. Numerous Cohasset residents have been requested to review it. Anyone wishing to comment on the plan will have the opportunity at public forums which are planned for early March.

Cohasset Harbor, Smoking and other Health Matters

Although the Board of Health is considered by some to be one of the most powerful boards in town, some things are well beyond the scope of its power. The Board has recently encountered several examples: In one instance, there has been a great deal of controversy about the expansion of a marina in the creek. The Board is interested because of the requirement for public sanitary facilities for boats and for people. If state and federal requirements for these are met, the board has little other oversight.

A complaint has come before the board relating to smoke leaking through the walls of a multiple dwelling into a non smoking apartment. The board can recommend remedial actions, but it can not enforce any non-smoking provisions within private dwellings.

National Child Passenger Safety Week

Feb. 14 began National Child Passenger Safety week which highlights safety recommendations for children less than four years old and 40 lb. in weight who have outgrown their child safety seats. In 1997, over 1,700 kids were killed and over 180,000 were injured while riding in motor vehicles. Studies have found that children who are too large for safety seats often are restrained improperly or not at all. For proper restraint, children who have outgrown safety seats (up to about 9 years) require booster seats or until the lap belt fits properly.

And remember, whenever possible, child passengers should ride in the back seat.

Cohasset schools: high expectations-at what cost?

The $8.9-9M budget currently under consideration is a 4.4 to 5.6 percent increase over the $8,525,000 needed for FY99. Undeniably, the real cost of running the schools is increasing at a 9-10% rate, but each year we are kidding the taxpayers by passing supplemental appropriations. For example, the FY00 budget proposal projects a reduction in SPED out-of-district spending of about 10 percent whereas it has been increasing at an annualized rate of at least 15 percent. You can make a safe bet that there will be a supplemental budget increase next year.

In future articles, I'll be writing about alternatives to "budget busters." As a starter, I have offered to help create a site-oriented, data-based budget software program that will permit the District to "slice and dice" the budget. The program would provide "linkage" so that a change in one part of the budget updates all affected areas. Most importantly, it would permit you to identify the per student cost of courses and extra-curricular activities. Budget reform must happen by next year. In the mean time, we should support the School Committee's budget proposal and not penalize students for past mismanagement and State unfunded mandates.

This is the second in an eight-part series of columns by former school committee member Joseph R. McElroy. Mr. McElroy is speaking as a private citizen and not for the school committee.

Tinky Winky and the Rev. Jerry

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Well, the word is out and so is Tinky Winky — out of the closet, that is.

The Rev. Jerry Falwell, in his dogged pursuit of everything that is sinful or fun in darkest America, outed the Teletubby as another example of the homosexual agenda to spread their nefarious lifestyle to the young and impressionable.

Seems Tinky Winky — I can't help but giggle every time I type the word — is obviously of the male persuasion yet he wears a purple jumpsuit, the chosen color of gay pride, and carries a purse, although he calls it his "magic bag."

Has the Rev. Jerry considered that purple is also the color of John Paul II and the rest of the popes?

You will remember the Rev. Jerry as the man who took over PTL ("Praise the Lord," "Pass the Loot," or whatever) when the Rev. Jimmy Bakker was caught inflagranti delecto with Jessica Hahn in Room 538 at the Sheraton Sand Key Hotel in Clearwater Beach, Fla.

Or has it occurred to the Rev. Jerry that, the purple Barney to the contrary notwithstanding, paleontologists have yet to discover the fossil bones of a gay dinosaur?

But I digress . . .

You will remember the Rev. Jerry as the man who took over PTL ("Praise the Lord," "Pass the Loot," or whatever) when the Rev. Jimmy Bakker was caught inflagranti delecto with Jessica Hahn in Room 538 at the Sheraton Sand Key Hotel in Clearwater Beach, Fla.

He is also the preacher who founded the Moral Majority and resigned the presidency of the conservative Christian group when he discovered his brand of morality may be in the minority after all.

"There's no need now for Jerry Falwell to walk, point and be the lightning rod," he said at the time. "Sometimes you get tired of being the lightning rod. I am now rededicating my life to the preaching of the gospel."

But once a lightning rod, always a lightning rod, as Ben Franklin used to say.

Only last month, the Rev. Jerry — now the chancellor of the 7,000-student Liberty University — who preaches Sundays in the Thomas Road Baptist Church in Lynchburg, Va., took a hit from a bolt of lightning.

He advised a conference on evangelism to expect the second coming of Christ within the next 10 years. In fact, he said, the Antichrist who will spread evil over the world before the second coming is already here and he is a Jewish male.

That didn't go over well with either the politically correct and the politically incorrect among us.

"I should have known better," the Rev. Jerry later told a prayer breakfast. "I apologize to my Jewish friends here and around the world, and I apologize to the Christians here for having created any kind of rift."

But he didn't row back on his original statement that "if he's going to be the counterfeit of Christ, he has to be Jewish. The only thing we know is he must be male and Jewish."

That's almost as threatening as Tinky Winky.

Making noise about diesel locomotive pollutants

boro — with its numerous grade crossings and potential bisection of Hingham's historic district has been mired in controversy for more than a decade.

O'Keeffe's findings certainly won't help the troubled Greenbush line. But he says he isn't singling out Greenbush for personal reasons. He's not an abutter to the tracks. Greenbush is the object of his intense scrutiny, because it just so happens the proposed railroad spur — with its diesel locomotives — is the one on the table at the moment. It's through Greenbush that O'Keeffe can make the larger point about the public health threat that diesel-powered engines create.

So ironically, it may not be safety, historic districts, or NIMBY issues that finally sidetrack Greenbush — but something called "nitrogen oxide emissions" or NOx. According to the federal Clean Air Act, NOx contributes to the creation of ground-level ozone, which is nasty to breathe.

"The Army Corps has told me several times," O'Keeffe said. "Without a resolution of the air quality issue, there will be no permit issued for Greenbush." The Army Corps of Engineers is the lead federal agency over the Greenbush project and was drawn into the fray 18 months ago due to wetlands issues and the fact that Greenbush would impact Hingham's National Register Lincoln Historic District.

The MBTA doesn't appear to dispute O'Keeffe's air quality findings. In a recent interview, Andrew Brennan – the MBTA's director of environmental affairs – said air quality issues shouldn't stop the project. He pointed out there were transportation and economic reasons to build Greenbush.

The EPA would seem to agree. In the Feb. 8 letter, the EPA states given the congestion of the Southeast Expressway, greater transportation alternatives are clearly necessary.

"Increased mass transit alternatives reduce reliance on automobiles and thereby encourage smarter development patterns," the EPA wrote.

Background in diesel

O'Keeffe's background with diesel engines began more than 20 years ago when he and an MIT colleague were interested in designing passive solar houses.

In the process, they tried to develop residential diesel generator systems but quickly realized the pollution implications of diesel engines.

"I have always been fascinated by the energy efficiency of buildings," he said. "But the simple fact is the consumption of energy results in air pollution."

Four years ago, O'Keeffe attended his first Greenbush meeting, a hearing at Cohasset Town Hall, at which the MBTA and its consulting engineers presented the results of the MBTA's environmental feasibility study — called an environmental impact statement — to a local audience.

"I was probably the only one in the audience due to my past experience that understood that diesel engines are not environmentally friendly," he recalled.

O'Keeffe explained that air quality analysis was not looked at by a lot of people because of the enormous perception of benefit of any public transportation proposal. In other words, there is a presumption that the train must be an air quality plus because of all the cars it would take off the road.

"I assumed that also prior to 1995 until I started doing the calculations," he said.

But the light soon went off for O'Keeffe who became absorbed in the study of pollutants from diesel locomotives which contribute significantly to respiratory problems, he said.

Kevin O'Keeffe of TREQ at work in his home office in Cohasset.

The federal Clean Air Act establishes guidelines for cleaning up the air nationally by certain dates, O'Keeffe explained. Massachusetts is one of the industrial states that are in "ozone non-compliance."

Ozone is a barometer of air quality. NOx is an ozone precursor — meaning when present, it — along with volatile organic compounds known as VOC — creates ozone through what is thought to be a photo-chemical reaction. "Mother Nature does the dirty work," O'Keeffe said.

While ozone is great to have in the stratosphere, it is not good down on the ground. "It's bad stuff to breathe," he said.

To comply with the Clean Air Act, the state developed an air quality state implementation plan (SIP) to reduce ozone levels. Greenbush was included in the SIP because it was supposed to offset the air quality impacts of the "Big Dig." O'Keeffe explained that in the first part of the decade the SIP focused on VOC, which is generated mostly by cars. But as automobile emission standards got more stringent, the SIP targeted NOx, which is the focus of O'Keeffe's research.

"The EPA took the stuff I submitted and came to the most modest conclusion that NOx emissions of trains exceed that of the automobiles they divert," he said. "This is a big problem in relation to the state implementation plan because the EPA decided for all non-compliant areas like eastern Massachusetts, the most effective way to reduce ozone over the latter part of the decade was to focus on NOx emissions."

Flawed studies

O'Keeffe said the MBTA environmental feasibility studies on the Old Colony line — that includes Greenbush, Plymouth and Middleboro — are flawed because while they show the air quality benefits of fewer cars, they don't factor in pollutants from the locomotives. O'Keeffe said this is a good reason for having an independent review of the project studies — something he has provided for free.

O'Keeffe said the health effects of diesel rail couldn't be understated. He explained that diesel-powered locomotives came into prominence following World War II. At the beginning of the 1950s only 10 percent of railroads in the country were diesel. At the end of the decade, 90 percent were. While steam-powered locomotives were "dirtier" and their demise made urban neighborhoods most impacted appear to be cleaner, the virtually invisible "particulates" or particles of diesel emissions and NOx create a greater health hazard.

While the MBTA says it will upgrade its diesel locomotive fleet, O'Keeffe says retrofitting diesel engines — which have a life span of 50 years — is not going to be easy. Unlike with cars, catalytic converters can't be generally used on diesel engines and maintaining filters can become almost impossible due to the pollutants.

Apart from suggesting light rail be developed which could be powered electrically, O'Keeffe doesn't have an easy solution for the traffic clogged Route 3 and the Southeast Expressway.

But he is sure he's on the right track about public health.

"I'm willing to put my whole resources, emotional, mental and financial behind this," he said. "I think it's that important to bring about a better awareness of a public health and environmental justice issue nationally."

Youth drug, alcohol activity mirror national average

ported using marijuana by age 15.

The Youth Risk Behavior Surveillance Survey (YRBSS) was conducted last year as part of a bi-annual national survey developed by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention which monitors six categories of priority health-risk behaviors among youth that contribute to intentional and unintentional injuries; tobacco use; alcohol and other drug use; sexual behaviors that contribute to unintended pregnancy and sexually transmitted diseases (STDs), including HIV; unhealthy dietary behaviors; and physical inactivity.

Gill has conducted the surveys nearly every year. "This is nothing new for me," he said. "For some parents, it's old hat. But we'll keep offering these because there are always new parents coming along." Besides sending the surveys home with students in grades Kindergarten-through-12, Gill also organizes educational forums that help to make meaning of the survey's statistics for parents and others in the community.

This year's forum is a cooperative effort between the Drug & Alcohol committee, the school's health advisory council and the police.

"Drug Proofing Cohasset" will feature guest speaker Richard Armour, a substance abuse and prevention specialist, who will speak at 7 p.m., March 2 in Cohasset High School's cafeteria. Topics include 12 steps to drug-proofing your children, forging communities resilient to drugs and building consensus for community action.

A federal government "Drug-Free Schools" grant paid for the speaker's appearance.

The Rev. Cliff Cutler of St. Stephens Episcopal Church and chairman of the town's Drug & Alcohol Committee, plans to attend the forum.

"It looks like an excellent program, not just for students, but the whole town," he said. "The survey results need to be discussed in the context of preventive work."

The trick is getting parents to come.

Gill is frustrated by parents who think the survey results are the outcome of kids goofing around on the answers. "There will always be adults out there saying kids aren't telling the truth and saying, my kids told me it was a big joke," said Gill. "But we can safely believe that most of the students are honest with the survey-taking because their answers match state and national averages," he said.

Pat Martin, a school committee and Drug & Alcohol committee member, thinks that parents who dismiss the survey place their child at risk.

"I think the fact that people want to dismiss it shows that we in Cohasset are not ready to deal with the fact that there is drug use in Cohasset and that, alone, puts the children at risk if the parents can't admit that it's here, that their children are exposed to it and that they may be using it," she said. "The forum is meant to combat that lack of awareness."

Gill said that he takes as many precautions as possible to insure the validity of the results, and explains that Cohasset's students' trends show that the students are doing things just like the kids in "Everytown, USA," and some of their behavior should be scary and alarming to adults. (See sample of results).

To make certain that the results are valid, Gill keeps the test date and questions a secret from the students. The teachers are forewarned only the night before the examination.

Gill explained that teen involvement with drugs and alcohol, generally speaking, involves use levels that they perceive as the norm.

"When it comes to alcohol and drug use, teens learn that this is the norm with other kids, so it's much easier for them to cave in and give in," said Gill. "I've been talking to kids over the years and have found that it's very easy for them to say 'no' if someone shows up at a party with a heroin-filled hypodermic needle because that's not the norm; but when we're talking about alcohol, a good number of those kids feel that by the ninth or 10th grade, the majority of the kids are experimenting."

Gill explained that issues surrounding trends in sexuality are also often based on what's seen as the norm. "Today the kids turn on TV or watch the news and the expectation is that most teenagers are doing these things," he said. "Ninety percent of the teens on TV are sexually active so the kids think it's normal to do this but 30 years ago, it wasn't the norm. Norms are changing. It doesn't make the kids good or bad kids but changes the level of expectations."

The irony of schools providing the programs to counteract risk behavior in teens is not lost on Gill, who points out that schools don't teach risk behavior; the culture and home does. "We're trying to solve a problem that we didn't create," he said. "Schools by themselves are not going to be able to do it. But we can help and that's all we're trying to do."

The "Drug Proofing Cohasset" forum with guest speaker Richard Armour will be held at 7 p.m., March 2, in the Cohasset High School cafeteria.

Summary of key findings:

- One-third of the seventh and eighth graders consumed five or more drinks in a row during the month preceding the survey. Sixty-five percent of Cohasset High School students reported having an alcoholic drink during this period, compared to 51percent nationally.
- During the month preceding the survey, 30 percent of Cohasset High School students reported riding in a car with a driver who had been drinking alcohol, compared to 37 percent nationally.
- About 30 percent of Cohasset High School students reported using marijuana in the month prior to the survey. The Cohasset data are consistent with national surveys that demonstrate a sharp increase in lifetime marijuana use from 34 percent in 1993 to 55 percent in 1998.
- Thirty-nine percent of Cohasset High School students reported using marijuana by age 15. Overall, the incidence of alcohol and marijuana use among Cohasset High School students rise dramatically between the ages of 13 and 15.
- Ten percent of Cohasset High School students reported that they had seriously considered suicide, compared to 21 percent nationally (1997). Twenty-five percent of Cohasset Middle School students reported that they had though seriously about suicide in their lifetime.

talk with someone and they have to trust you," Harold said. "A course that I took in men's issues taught me that being counseled for substance abuse is difficult for men, in particular, because they tend not to trust, bond or have a role model."

Harold explained that the basic truth behind alcohol and drug abuse problems is some underlying cause, just as any addition from heroin use to "shopaholic" behavior. Treatments run the gamut from five-day recovery houses like Faxon, to 28-day programs with group therapy and six-month halfway houses that include spot-check drug testing.

For Harold, hooking a caller up with a referral is the reward.

"It's been a slow start but it's working, which is all I care about," he said. "I'm patient, and I always bring a good book."

The Cohasset Drug & Alcohol Hotline is in operation from 6-10 p.m., Tuesdays at 383-4120.

Deer Hill librarian has innovative approach

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

For Marjorie Murphy, Deer Hill School librarian, every year brings an entirely new experience.

That's because the 18-year veteran of the library brings her years of teaching experience, passion for reading and insight into human nature to incorporate new ideas into the place she loves. Her speech is peppered with enthusiasms the children are familiar with and her fourth- through sixth-grade fans would probably agree that she's "cool."

Stuffed animals line the bookshelves, the walls are covered with students' artwork and noise levels rise well above traditional library levels.

But saying, "Shhhh," is less Murphy's style than saying, "awesome," or "cool," about things she knows her students will like.

"Before, I taught in Blackstone, Milford, Worcester and Jamaica Plain — every kind of school," explained Murphy. "What's wonderful in this system is that it's very much like a private school. You get to really know these children, work with their strengths, watch them grow, and many of them come back to see you."

Case in point, high-schooler Emily Keefe, whom Murphy remembers as a "great reader," and who now comes in on her own time to volunteer for a 7:30 a.m. reading club that many Deer Hill fourth-graders have chosen to participate in. The club's book selection is kept out on tables in baskets with balloons tied to the handle and "munchkins" and juice are kept out for those who haven't had time for breakfast.

The program will be capped off at the school year's end with a "lock-in," where students, librarian and volunteers roll out their sleeping bags and spend the night at Deer Hill.

"We'll have a pizza party and the children will be able to play in the gym or, if the weather is right, then they can play outside," said Murphy. "They think that's 'cool.'"

Parent volunteer Jane Corry and curriculum coordinator Ruth Fennessey, who come in every Wednesday before the regularly scheduled school day, lead the program, called the "Reading Club." Parent volunteer Debbi Shadd assists every other week.

"It's so exciting to have volunteers," said Murphy. "We called the high school counselors and asked if they would put this information before the students doing community service and I was quite amazed at the amount of students who signed up. Plus, I have so many parents who come and offer their time."

Group projects are encouraged in the library, where students often meet around the rust-colored sectional couches to listen to each other discuss a favorite book.

Murphy explained that such discussions foster cooperation and self-esteem. "They know to be polite when another child is speaking, because they will have to give a presentation, too," said Murphy. "And the children really enjoy sharing what they've read."

Another practice that instills camaraderie is the basketball hoop that students line up to shoot to and earn points. If a child makes the shot and scores, he doubles his points and goes to the back of the line to try again.

"All of the kids are happy for them and they count up their winnings, sometimes to double, triple or even quadruple their original score," she explained.

The final scores are tallied on a magnetic board, with each child climbing on a stool to move the magnetic pieces into position. The class that earns the most points in a month wins a merit award, which is announced by the school secretary over the intercom. "You can hear each grade level's winning class cheering," laughed Murphy. "If they win three times, they get a Wilbur Wheel ice-cream sandwich."

After 18 years, Deer Hill librarian Marjorie Murphy enjoys her job as much as ever.

One method Murphy has devised to help students with MCAS testing is through presentations from articles in magazines such as Odyssey, Kids Discover, Sports Illustrated for Kids and Faces and Cobblestones. MCAS tests are state-mandated achievement tests.

"This is a way of getting them ready for the MCAS," Murphy explained. "We have them highlight what is most important in the article and they see how the story has been summarized. Then they give a presentation where they summarize the article. Reading isn't a passive pursuit."

Junior librarians

Murphy's Junior Librarian Program brings in fifth- and sixth-graders that volunteer their recess time to help in the library. The students put the books on the cart into numerical order, put away fiction books, check-in books and run the computer. "They do an awful lot," is how Murphy sums it up.

Once or twice a month, Murphy rewards the junior librarians with a pizza and soda lunch in the library. "They think that's very special," she said.

When children's book authors come to the Hingham library, Murphy purchases tickets and treats the junior librarians to supper at Bergson's and then takes them to the lecture.

Children can try their hand at writing, too.

The school's new digital camera has been used to take pictures of the students who then write their own mini-biographies. They explain who they are to their classmates.

"It encourages kids to stand up and talk, but for those who are shy, they can gain confidence watching the other kids get up and speak," said Murphy. "Also, they learn to respect one another."

A parent, who has also provided free computer maintenance for the library, donated some of the computers in the library.

Murphy is very happy with the computers located two doors down from the library.

"Children can learn so much on computers, and it's been an especially good thing for SPED (special education) students who gain some control over their lessons with computers," she sai.d

She shows off the computer room's chairs, handed down from the old Osgood, and the tables that have been passed on from the high school. "We don't waste anything here," she said.

The PSO contributes money for new books, which, Murphy explained, always ties into the school curriculum and often is something that she knows at least one particular student will enjoy.

"I couldn't do all that I do here if it weren't for all the volunteers," said Murphy. "And we are so fortunate with our public library. Sue Terry and Sue Pope (Paul Pratt librarians) always locate and hold copies for us when we need them. We should be thankful we have such a town as this."

The picture tells the story as the CHS wrestling team celebrates their first ever Division III South sectional title. They'll try to do the same at the state meet this weekend at Taconic High in Pittsfield.

Lucky 13 qualify for Division III finals

Skippers win first South title; Sweeney named Division III Coach of Year

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

All in all, it turned out to be one heck of a weekend for Cohasset at the Division III South sectional wrestling tourney at Carver High.

Thirteen out of the 14 wrestlers the team entered into the tourney wrestled well enough to advance to the Division III finals this weekend at Taconic High School in Pittsfield.

Cohasset needed all of those points as they slipped by the three-time defending champion Foxboro Warriors 346-344.5 to win the team competition.

And to top it all off, head coach Torin Sweeney was named the Division III Coach of the Year at the meet.

So what do they do for an encore?

Just keep on winning, that's all.

They won in style on Saturday night as it all came down to the heavyweight final between senior J.P. Laugelle and Carver Brett Jordan. A win by pin would give the Skippers the team title and Laugelle kept everyone on the edge of their seats before finally pinning Jordan with 10 seconds left in the match thus setting off a jubilant celebration from the Cohasset faithful.

"It was just an incredible feeling," said Sweeney. "I don't think we left the gym for an hour after the match was over. Everyone wanted to share in the win.

"A lot of these parents have been with the program for years with the older brothers of the kids on the team so to finally get the South title is something special," he added. "We've been so close so many times and to finally actually win is an amazing accomplishment."

CHS WRESTLING COACH TORIN SWEENEY

Foxboro and Cohasset went back and forth for the team title during the finals. In fact, every final except for the 215 pound class had a representative from one of the two squads. The Warriors looked to have a solid lead of 10 points after a win in the 130 pound class, but Mike Baird got a big win at 135 pounds to get CHS back into the mix.

Tracking the points as the matches went along, Sweeney knew that Laugelle needed the pin to seal the deal.

"I just told J.P. to go out there and stay in control and wear the other guy down to get the pin in the second or third period," said Sweeney. "He followed the plan exactly and did what he needed to do."

Besides Laugelle, three other Skipper seniors found their way to the winners circle.

Mike Baird won the 135 pound class with a 7-2 decision over Norwell's Mike Robertson.

Mike Rossi got the better of Hanover's Bill Dunn, 9-5, to win the 152 pound class.

The 160 pound champion Justin Golden decisioned Middleboro's Alex Cotter, 14-5.

Falling in the finals were Craig Sheerin (112 pounds), Chris Pratt (119 pounds), senior Ben Littauer (145 pounds) and senior Luke Caldwell (171 pounds).

Freshman Daniel Littauer took a third place in the 130 pound class.

Skippers fall in Classic Tourney

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

On paper, Tuesday night's Hingham-Cohasset match-up in the opening round of the First Annual South Shore Basketball Classic should have been cake for the Harbormen.

They're 10-8 and heading to the state hoop tourney for the fourth year in a row while the young Skippers haven't come across many breaks during their 4-14 season.

An easy tune-up for the upcoming state hoop tourney, you say?

Not on your life.

Cohasset gave Hingham all that they could handle and then a little bit more before the Harbormen came away with a 74-62 win, advancing to the finals of the tourney against the winner of the Marshfield vs Norwell last night (Wednesday).

Hingham finds out where their tourney road takes them officially on Friday when the Division II South pairings are announced. Opening round games should begin on Monday or Tuesday night.

"We came out strong in the first half and took it to them pretty good defensively," said CHS coach Ron Ford, whose squad led for a time in the first half but went into the break down 2 points, 25-23. "When it got late in the game we missed some key free-throws and you can't do that against a team like Hingham.

"We got the lead down to six points a couple of time but we were never able to get over that hump."

It was a true team effort for the Harbormen as no less than 12 players got their name in the scoring column, led by big efforts from senior John Twoomey (18 points) and nine each from junior Ryan Sullivan and sophomore Jason Riley.

Senior Jaime DeMichele tossed in 15 points for the Skippers while sophomore Daniel Trowers added 11 in the losing cause.

"That's just the type of team we are," said head coach Jed Phelan of the balanced scoring attack. "No superstars, just a bunch of unselfish kids working together and pulling for each other. I love the way this team plays together."

Phelan said the competition for playing time among his squad has been very healthy in helping his team grow as the season has gone along.

After a reasonably rough start the squad has won seven of their last eight games, clinching a spot in the tourney last week in a big road win over Middleboro.

"The kids know that I have confidence in every player on this team," said Phelan. "If someone isn't doing their job or is having an off night, then I'll just look for that spark from someone else."

It was the second team that did a good deal of the damage for Phelan on this night after the first squad had some trouble handling the Cohasset pressure in the first half.

"We outplayed them the first half, but still went into the half down by two points, which was a little dis-

Gymnastics team has all-star season

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

This was the team that, at best, was going to win two, maybe three meets this season.

So when the Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics squad wrapped up its dual meet schedule at an even 5-5 with a 124.1-118.7 loss to third place Hingham, head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni was hardly disappointed.

"We worked toward our team and personal goals all season," said Ardizzioni, whose squad finished fourth in the Pilgrim Conference behind Scituate, Hanover and Hingham. "It's pretty exciting that three girls of a team of eight were named to the all-star team."

The selection of Kristen Sheerin, Carlie Carter and Tara Hettstrom, in fact, was the most of any squad in the conference. Sheerin was the conference's beam all-star with just one fall all season and an average score of 8.5. Hettstrom, the captain and veteran member of CN, averaged an 8.375 on her specialty, the floor exercise, to be named, and Carter improved on her 7.5 of a year ago to average an 8.025 on the bars.

"I was happy it went our way on that day," said Ardizzoni.

In the Feb. 4 Pilgrim Conference meet at Carver, Hettstrom had a a big night with seconds on the vault (7.85) and floor (8.35) and a third place finish on the bars (7.45).

Sheerin had a strong all-around performance, finishing with a 32.55 for third place and Carter wound up a solid sixth on the floor exercise, scoring a 7.55.

The meet capped a successful season after a Hingham loss that wasn't totally unexpected. CN had defeated the Harbormen the first time around, but Ardizzoni knew when her squad was trailing by 2.5 points at halftime a sweep would have to wait until next year.

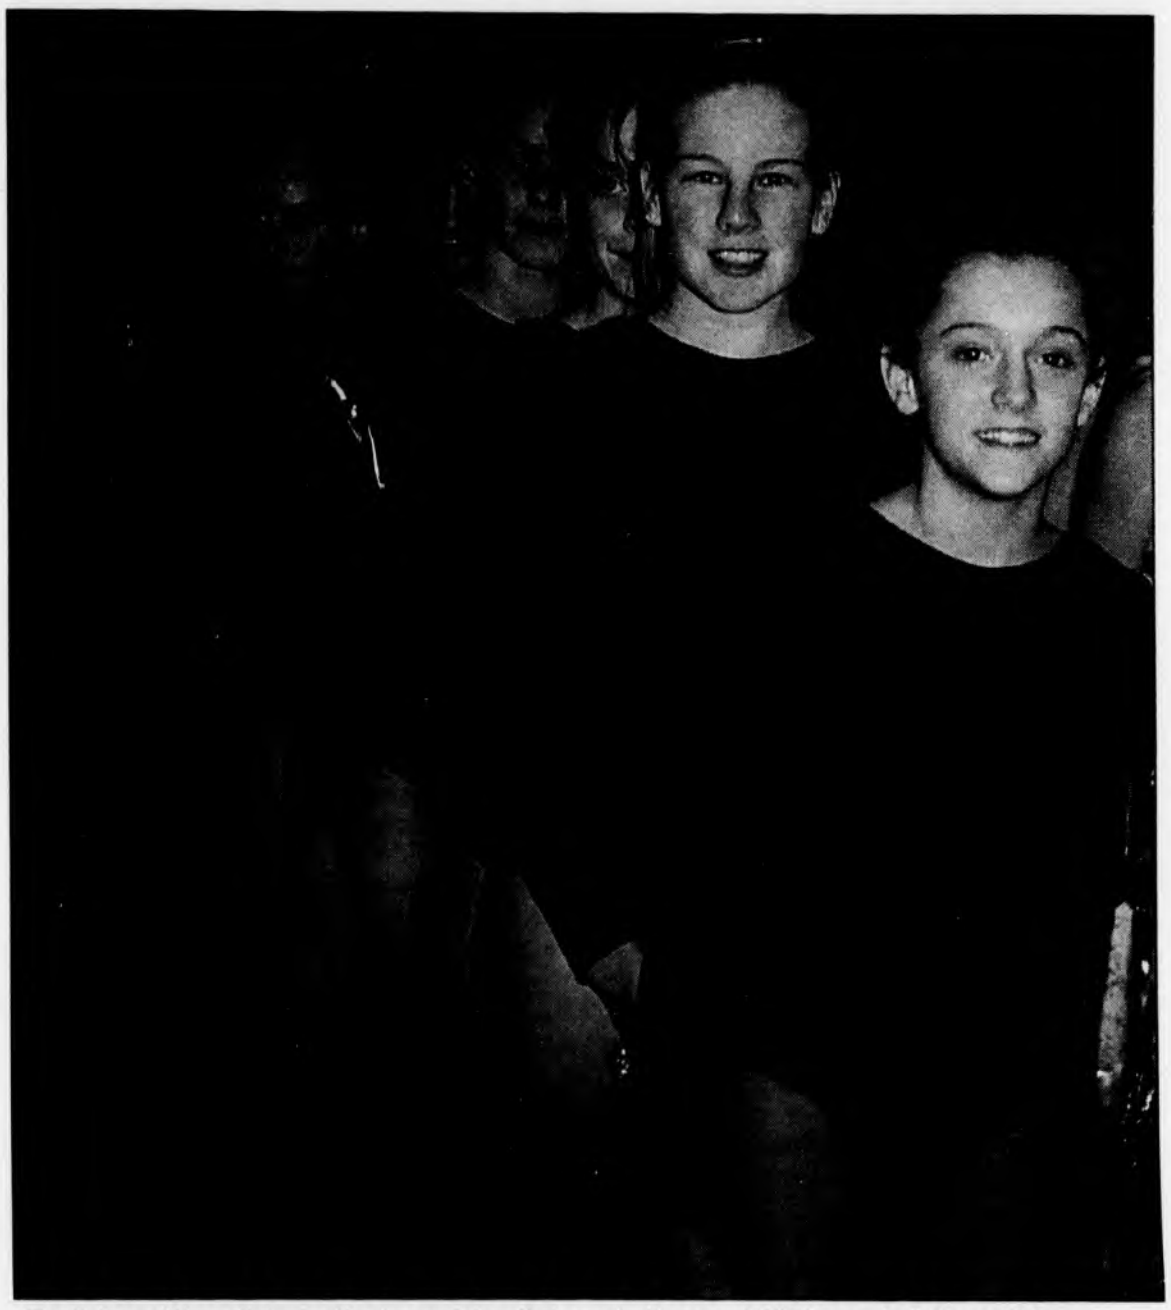
"They looked unbelievable," Ardizzoni said of the Hingham girls. "They were definitely a better team than (second place) Hanover, but they had their share of injuries during the season."

CN still had several strong performances and just missed its season goal of a 119 overall score.

Sheerin took seconds on the beam (8.0), floor (8.6) and vault (8.2) to lead CN. Carter had a second on bars (7.9) and a third on beam (8.0), while Hettstrom scored a strong 8.4 on the floor exercise to finish third behind Sheerin.

The Norwell girls improved their scores dramatically all season with Pattie LaCroix, the standout from the crowd.

Ardizzoni believes if the season were to begin right now, the girls could score in the 120s.



The Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics team makes their way to the recent All-Star meet at Carver High.

All-Star game goes down to the wire

By Mike Hardman
STAFF WRITER

Sure, they're talented.

That was a given considering their all-star status.

But, that wasn't the only reason why they were picked to be the boys basketball all-stars from the South Shore and Patriot League.

Try their competitiveness for another reason.

The Patriot League rallied from being down by 17 points in the second half to get within two before losing, 80-76, to the South Shore League stars in Norwell last Friday night. It was the first all-star game between the two leagues.

"It's a fun time for the kids," said Rockland coach Bob Fisher, who coached the Patriot League team. "Coaches dream of championship teams, but players dream about being in the All-Star game. It's a dream come true for them. It's very special for the parents and the kids."

There was also the matter of league pride on the line.

That's what came through on both sides in the final minutes of the game.

"The kids work hard all year long and this is a lot of fun," said Norwell coach John Willis, who coached the South Shore League all-stars. "It was an interesting game."

Senior guard Jamie DeMichele (bottom row, second from left) represented Cohasset on the South Shore League's All-Star team as they took on the Patriot League team over the weekend.

Playing for the South Shore League team were Abington's Todd Carey, Carver's Craig Burden, Cohasset's Jamie DeMechele, Hanover's Brian Certone, Rick DeCristafaro and Jared Baker, Hull's John Greenleaf, Norton's Sean Ribeiro and Steve Newcomb, Norwell's Dan McNamara, Jay Edwards and Nick Hajjar.

Suiting up for the Patriot League were East Bridgewater's Dwight Dahlgren and Matt Singleton, Hingham's Brian Miller, Jim Battista and John Toomey, Mashpee's Dennis Gorczyca, Middleboro's Mackenzie Harrison and Dave Hazard, Randolph's Derrick Muff and Sol Thompson, Rockland's Rich Cormier, Ryan Mitchell, Bobby Murphy and Mark Petrosevich.

In the final four minutes of the game, the Patriot League stars went on a 13-2 run to cut the lead to four at 77-74.

Singleton scored two inside hoops, while teammate Dahlgren nailed a three-pointer and Gorczyca made two free throw during the stretch.

"It's an individual thing," said Fisher of the All-Star game, "but they are competitive. We pressed, but we didn't trap and just played Rockland basketball to get back in it."

McNamara stopped the 6-0 run with a free throw, but Battista hit a shot for the Patriot League to get with two at 78-76.

Newcomb accounted for the final margin with an inside basket.

"These guys played real well together," said Willis. "It was a pretty unselfish game with a lot of good passing."

Led by the passing of Cerone, the SSL stars came out on fire, jumping out to a 22-8 lead.

"I worried in the pre-game," said Willis with a smile. "They (the Patriot League) were all dunking the ball. Jay (Edwards) was the only guy on my team that could dunk. We were shooting jump shots."

That turned out to work in their favor.

Carey canned a pair of three pointers during the opening stretch, while Greenleaf also had a couple of baskets during the run.

"They came out strong and we didn't score for three minutes," said Fisher. "They were able to hit some nice threes."

DeMechele fed DeCristafaro with the ball for two-points and a 45-28 halftime lead for the SSL stars.

Greenleaf was the top scorer for the South Shore League with 12 points,, while McNamara and Baker had a 11 apiece. DeMechele had 10, Cerone and Ribeiro, eight, Carey, six, Newcomb and Edwards, four, Hajjar, three. DeCristafaro, two and Burden, one.

For the Patriot League, Mitchell was the top scorer with 12 points, Cormier, Dahlgren and Harrison scored eight points, Singleton and Miller, seven, Muff, six, Toomey, Gorczyca and Hazard, four, Thompson, three, Petrosevich and Battista, two and Murphy, one.

Baird at 125 pounds and Kevin DeVito at 189 pounds, while Liam O'Donnell moves on with a fifth place at 140 pounds as does Joe Carbone at 215 pounds.

John Hertig did not qualify at 103 pounds, but the point he picked up in the tournament turned out to be vital to the Skippers overall cause.

A number of Skippers will go into the division finals with high seedings including Laugelle (first from the South), Carbone (fifth), DeVito (fourth), Caldwell (second), Golden (first), Mike Rossi (first), Ben Littauer (second), O'Donnell (fifth), Mike Baird (first), Dan Littauer (third), Tim Baird (fourth), Pratt (second), Sheerin (second) and Hertig (eighth).

To warm up for the sectionals the squad competed in a tournament hosted by Whitman-Hanson, placing seven finalists but losing on points to a strong Hingham squad.

"We had more finalists, but Hingham had a little better luck getting pins so they picked up the extra points they needed to come out on top," said Sweeney. "The kids wrestled as well as possible and it lead us to our best finish ever in this particular tourney."

Leading the way for the skippers were first place finishers Caldwell and Baird, who Sweeney said looked great in coming back from the injured list.

Second place finishers included Ben Littauer at 145 pounds, who dropped a 2-0 decision in the finals to one of the better wrestlers in that weight class that the state has to offer. Others who lost in the finals included Laugelle. Golden, Rossi and O'Donnell.

Getting fourth place finishes were freshman Peter Kovach, Pratt, Devito and Carbone.

Tim Baird also picked up a win in the tourney.

heartening. They came out strong in the second half and we weren't able get control," said Ford. "You couldn't ask for a better effort from the kids."

Sophomore Kevin Andrews drew praise from the coach for his inspired play off the bench, tossing in nine points in the second half.

"He's going to be a good player, but like the rest of these guys he's still learning," said Ford. "This is a very young team that's only going to get better in the next couple of years. We've lost a bunch of games this season by close scores, so now it's a matter of winning some of those games and giving the kids some confidence."

Phelan is not in a dissimilar position in fielding a tourney savvy team that sports only two seniors (Toomey and Iaonelli) but an amazing 11 eleventh graders on the roster.

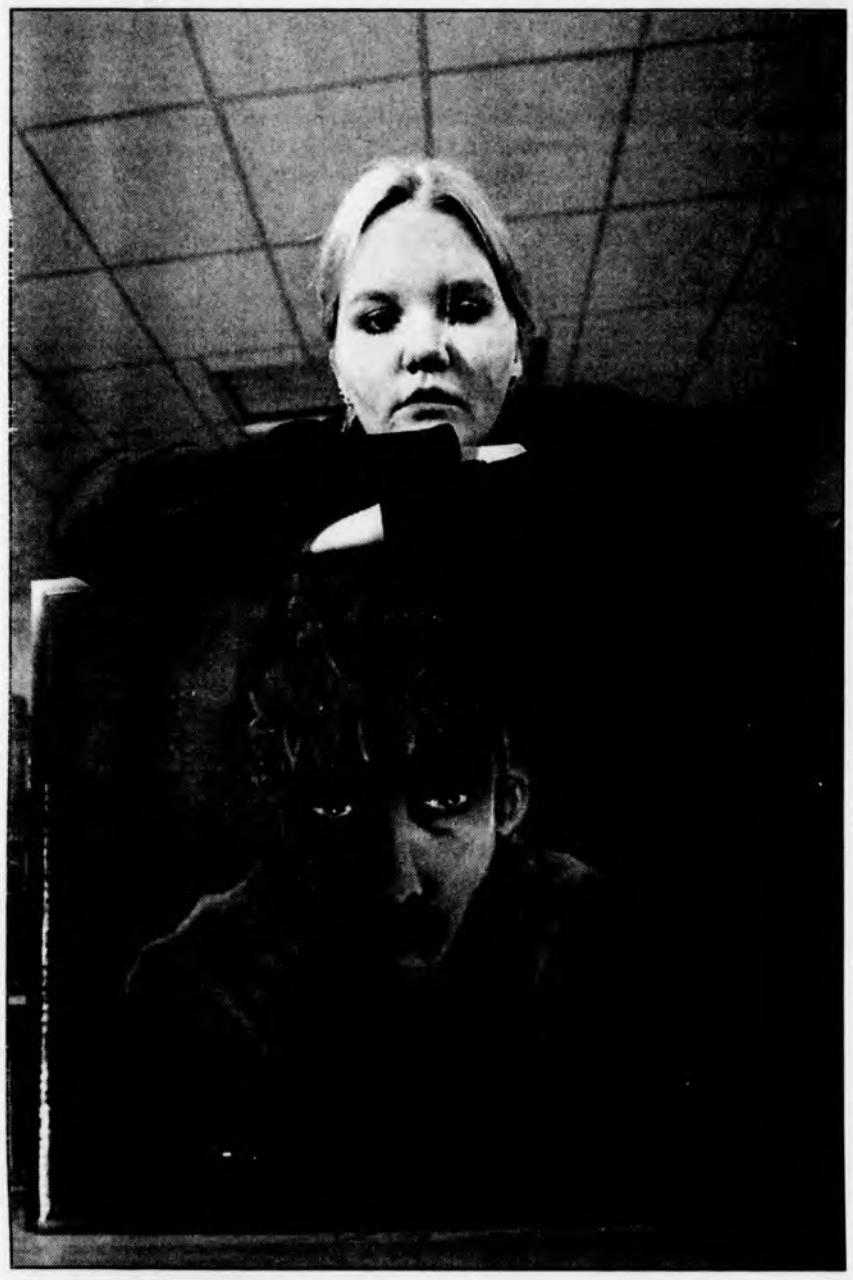
People's choice art winners named



More than 20 entries were submitted in the first annual People's Choice Art Awards sponsored by the Ripley Library Media Center and the Art Department at Cohasset Middle High School. More than 270 students, parents and teachers voted in the contest which asked voters to choose their favorite piece in the two categories of entrants — grades 7-9 and 10-12.

The People's Choice in 7-9 category was "The Money Cow," by Peter Kovach, a brightly-colored collage which depicts a cow in the center of an orange field under a bright blue sky. The black and white cow was constructed from counterfeit money. The winner in the 10-12 category was a mesmerizing untitled charcoal piece by Karyn Grey. A young man leaning on a table staring out at the viewer makes this work very effective.

Those two artists will receive a stipend for their work and the pieces will be framed and initiate the permanent art display in the hallway between the Ripley and the Art Rooms.

$7.7K override set for town election

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

The final figures are in on the town budget and the override amount is set. The figures incorporate $75,000 the school committee cut from its "basic" budget request as well as the extra money that will be required to pay health insurance for the employees the schools need to hire.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said that the proposed town budget that will go before town meeting is $20,256,412, including a $766,154 override. What that means is that the tax rate projection for FY2000 based on the override is $16.15. The override is needed because the proposed budget exceeds the amount of revenue the town is expected to receive.

For the owner of a $341,000 home, the tax bill will be $5,509.80 if the override passes, which amounts to a $409.35 increase.

"Keep in mind that people's bills would have gone up $133 anyway, just based on regular increases," Haddad said. "This override is causing it go up $276.31 additionally."

Selectmen and school committee members met twice last week — on Tuesday and Thursday evenings — to discuss a reduction in the school committee's request for a 9.9 percent budget hike.

The school budget for FY2000 amounted to $8.9 million, just short of a 10 percent increase over this year's $8.2 million budget. School committee chairman Rick Shea told selectmen that the budget included out of district costs for SPED (special education) students who, under state law, include pre-school age children.

While selectmen were sympathetic to unavoidable expenses, such as SPED funding, they found fault with the new Joseph Osgood Elementary's utility bills which had come in higher than anticipated; with the $278,000 athletic budget; with a proposed 7 percent increase in teachers' salaries and the new teacher positions.

Haddad pointed out last week that each new employee filling over-20-hour positions cost $5,000 in health insurance premiums from the town, which would create an additional expense.

Shea held firm on the new hires, explaining that a teacher's grievance complaint or litigation could result if a SPED aide was not brought on at the Deer Hill school.

Schools superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey and school committee members Mark DeGiacomo and Pat Martin returned to selectmen Thursday night with $75,000 shaved from the budget, but selectmen wanted to see an additional $45,000 reduction, which school committee members were unable to swing.

> "We'll try to make cuts which affect the children and classrooms least."
> Mark DeGiacomo,
> school committee

Haddad again asked DeGiacomo if the school committee might be able to look for $45,000 more that they could cut back on.

"I originally proposed a $699,000 override," said Haddad, adding that an additional cut of $45,000 would bring the override figure closer to that proposal.

DeGiacomo said that he had thought of little else but how to reduce the budget since meeting with the selectmen Tuesday night.

"We (school committee) haven't had a chance to really meet, but we can reduce the budget by $75,000 in order to try to help the situation and work with the board of selectmen," said DeGiacomo. "We'll try to make cuts which affect the children and classrooms least."

Selectman Diane Sullivan challenged the school committee.

"We have kids sharing texts and materials and teachers are getting 7.5 percent and 10 percent increases for their salaries," she said. "In the business world, this wouldn't happen."

"This has to end at some point and we hope you can support the town override and what we've done," DeGiacomo said. "We don't feel comfortable going lower."

Voters can decide on the override at the annual Town Election, April 10.

Grubby work ahead on Milliken-Bancroft field

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Grubs and sports teams will decimate Milliken-Bancroft field unless it receives some rest and a little tender loving care. With a landscaper's diagnosis in hand, Cohasset Soccer Club president Wallace St. John, Peter Laugelle of the DPW and the recreation department's Jack Worley won selectmen's support last week to ask for $9,000 at town meeting to treat the field to include sod replacement and reseeding.

St. John and Laugelle consulted with Foye & Letendre Landscaping, Inc. of Quincy, which handles Fenway Park and Foxboro Stadium about the condition of the field.

St. John said that Milliken-Bancroft field is experiencing a problem that many South Shore towns have—not enough fields to support the number of sports programs run. During its heaviest use, the field is used about 6-1/2 days out of the week for baseball, soccer, lacrosse, alumni varsity games and residents' games.

Laugelle pointed out that lacrosse in particular is getting popular, and soccer is bigger than ever, so kids are on the field until 8 or 9 p.m.

"What's necessary to keep the fields up is to let them rest but they need to be seeded, fertilized and rest for a year at a time," he said. "We have to do sod replacement in order to keep it up, rather than the optimum treatment, but we haven't even done that in about four or five years."

But first, Laugelle will take care of the grub problem, which has been recurring one due to the last few mild winters which have allowed the larvae to burrow close to the surface.

"I spread this stuff but it's not good for the grass," he said. "You have to shut the grounds down and since the teams are at it the whole year except for two weeks in June, that's the only time we could close the field down." Laugelle will work at portions of the field at a time so that players can utilize most of the field.

Break-ins at shopping center

A tenant who rents an apartment above Good Sport, 166 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., called 9-1-1 when he spotted a man dressed in black on the roof trying to get into the building, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

The incident occurred at about 2:30 a.m. Tuesday.

The perpetrator fled after setting off an audible alarm, Jackson said.

Further investigation revealed that Atlantic Bagel and the bottle & can redemption center in the shopping center had been broken into and several hundred dollars were stolen. The perpetrator also attempted to break into Harbor Mechanical and a storage area leased by Autohaus, Jackson said.

Det. Gregory Lennon is leading the investigation, he said.

IT'S HAPPENING

It's a relay rally!

The American Cancer Society's Relay for Life will hold a fun get-together Tuesday, March 2, 7 p.m., at the Lightkeepers' Residence in Cohasset. Take 228 North, (Cross Route 3A) to Main Street to Summer Street, left on Summer Street to Border Street. Cross bridge, take immediate left onto Government Island. Lightkeepers' Residence is on right.

Please RSVP by Feb. 23 to Mary Nagle at (781) 383-6030.

Relay for Life is 24 hours of good times for a great cause — joining the race to beat cancer! Teams from families, clubs, hospitals, churches, neighborhoods and corporations will all join the fun. Teams camp out in tents (if they choose), enjoying a festive atmosphere created by music, food and camaraderie.

Last year, with your help, they raised more than $38,000 for the fight against cancer. This year, the event will be even better! Come join to find out how you can make a difference and be a part of this "Celebration of Life!"

Can't make it that night? Please pass this invitation along to someone in your workplace or neighborhood who wants to join the community's fight against cancer.

For more information, call Mary Shepherd at the American Cancer Society at (508) 584-9600 or e-mail mshephe2@cancer.org.

Local legislators get low scores on environment

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Forget the MCAS. Cohasset legislators received low scores on a Massachusetts Audubon Society report card for not supporting legislation that would benefit the environment. Mass. Audubon rated legislators on four bills: the Brownfields Bill, the Cape Cod land bank bill, the Drinking Water State Revolving Fund, and the MDC Commission Budget.

Mass. Audubon gave Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset , a score of 75 for her votes regarding environmental legislation. Senator Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, did even worse, getting a 63 from Mass. Audubon. Despite the low scores, neither Hedlund nor Murray seem worried about the opinion of the Massachusetts Audubon Society.

Murray said she isn't really bothered by the Mass. Audubon scores. She said her constituents know where she is coming from.

"They (Mass. Audubon) don't ask you why you vote the way you did," Murray said. "They just say this is what they want you vote yes on."

Some members of the Massachusetts Republican Party have accused Mass. Audubon of weighting the report card in favor of Democrats.

"I do agree with (House Minority Leader) Francis Marini that this is weighted toward Democrats," Hedlund said. "Basing these scores on a couple of votes is silly. This might lend credence to conspiracists that the scores are weighted for Democrats. I got a plus for the MDC bill, but I don't even consider that to be environmental legislation. It's more of a fiscal policy that would not have adversely affected the parks."

Some Democrats did receive low scores from Mass. Audubon. Senator Robert Antonioni, D-Leominster, received a 69, Senator Fred Berry, D-Peabody, got a 69, and Senator Steven Brewer, D-Barre, received a 75.

Mass. Audubon is not biased against Republicans, Legislative Liaison Marsha Westropp said. She said Mass. Audubon is frustrated that there are so few environmental bills making it to the Legislature. Last year, the Senate and House, according to Mass. Audubon voted on only four environmental bills.

"I don't feel that Republicans are anti-environmental," Westropp said. "We'd love to work with them and we have been meeting with them to discuss environmental issues."

Mass. Audubon is just one of many groups that issue annual report cards rating legislator performance on specific issues. Westropp said Mass. Audubon looks at all the votes in the Legislature at the end of each year and determines which ones affect the environment. Those bills are then gathered together. Mass. Audubon assigns two points to every legislator who casts a vote supporting greater environmental protection, one point for no vote or a present vote, and no points for voting against greater environmental protection.

Hedlund received two negative scores for supporting amendments that would have expanded the scope of the Brownfields Legislation. The Brownfields bill attempted to do something about contaminated industrial properties that no one wants to purchase because of clean up costs and potential liability. Many banks won't loan money for the purchase of contaminated properties because bankers fear the lender will go bankrupt cleaning the site and fighting lawsuits related to the contamination.

By providing funding and better protection against lawsuits, legislators hoped to encourage companies to purchase contaminated properties, clean the sites, and open businesses. Hedlund supported two amendments that would have widened the scope of the bill to include more communities in the state.

"We tried to expand the bill to include older, industrial communities like Chicopee," Hedlund said. "The bill favors wealthier communities."

Westropp said the Senate Ways and Means Committee reduced funding for the Brownfields bill, diluting it in the process. With less funding, it makes more sense to focus on the very worst spots, many of which are in larger communities, Westropp said. Widening the scope of the bill would only have served to make it less effective, she added.

Murray received a low score for voting to expand the Cape Co[illegible]

bank bill to include all Massachusetts communities. Murray said she wanted communities to have the option through a home-rule petition to adopt land banks like the one on the Cape.

Westropp said the land bank bill was handcrafted specifically for the Cape. The bill allows Cape communities to assess a 3 percent tax on all home sales with the proceeds providing money for a land bank. Westropp said the bill would not work in most Massachusetts communities because it only addressed the needs of the Cape. Voting to expand the bill would have killed it in the Legislature, Westropp said.

"Even though we favor land banks for every community in the state, this was not the way to do it," Westropp said.

A life of giving back to Cohasset

Keating passes away at 79

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset lost truly one of its own this week when T. Gerard Keating passed away at the age of 79 on Feb. 20.

Honored by the Cohasset Mariner as its 1993 Citizen of the Year — the first award of its kind by the weekly newspaper — Keating was respected and revered by so many citizens in the town he loved.

"He was just such a part of this community, his whole life was devoted to his family and this town," said Kathy Bryanton, director of the Council on Elder Affairs. "He was a person I truly, truly respected and admired.

"He always had time for you. He always gave 110 percent of himself to anything that was asked of him."

A survivor of a heart by-pass operation and several strokes, Keating wasn't one to dwell on his own problems. He kept his eyes focused forward, on what needed to be done.

A modest man, Keating was, however, delighted to be recognized as Citizen of the Year.

"Getting this award is like a good dose of Geritol," he told the Mariner at the time. "It may not help you physically but it sure helps your spirit and morale."

A fourth-generation Cohasseter, Keating served the town tirelessly for about 65 of his 79 years.

Autism hits close to home for some families

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Another in a series on understanding special education

Say "autism" and an image of a remote child spinning or making repetitive hand motions springs to mind, as does Dustin Hoffman's portrayal of "Rainman," the autistic savant with a gift for memorizing numbers without an ability to comprehend the context of numerical value.

Autism is more aptly called Autism Spectrum Disorder and it hits close to home, literally, for groups of South Shore parents of diagnosed children who have taken to attending local support groups that address the brain disorder.

In the recent past, their children might have been diagnosed with Attention Deficit Disorder, with or without Hyperactivity. Decades ago, childhood schizophrenia or even schizoid personality might have been the diagnosis for

Fab Five qualify for state finals

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

The Lucky 13 are now down to the Fabulous Five after the Division III finals, but CHS wrestling coach Torin Sweeney couldn't be happier as he leads his remaining grapplers to the state finals this weekend at Salem High.

"You couldn't ask anymore form these kids," said Sweeney after his team fought hard before falling to Foxboro 158.5-136 over the weekend in the Division III finals. "We know we are always going to be the underdogs because we are the smallest school in the division, but we still put on a fine performance and came away with second place.

"We've got nothing to hang our heads down about and the group we have going to the state finals is the largest contingent we have ever had and the second place overall finish was also our best effort ever," he added. "You can't ask for any more than that."

Leading the Skippers charge was senior tri-captain Mike Rossi, who defeated Hanover's Bill Dunn to take the crown in the 152 pound class.

The two also met in the finals of the South sectionals and a third match this weekend would not be far out of the question at the state meet.

"Mike was on top of his game," said Sweeney of his Division III champion. "You're at the point right now where anything can happen and anybody can beat anybody, so Mike has just a good of chance of walking out a state champion as anyone else in the bracket."

While Rossi was the only class winner a quartet of Skipper grapplers also wrestled well enough to move on to the next level of competition,

THIS WEEK IN COHASSET

Recycling committee members sought

Selectman Merle S. Brown, who also sits on the recycling committee, put out a call this week for volunteers to serve on the recycling committee. He even encouraged those who don't think recycling is a priority to join, so the committee can show them how recycling works.

Interested citizens should call the selectmen's office at 383-4105 for more information.

Donations sought for firefighting device

While selectmen support the need for a "thermal imaging" camera for the fire department, they say the town cannot afford the $25K to pay for it.

They asked call firefighter John MacNeill, 752 Jerusalem Road, to see if the call firefighters could solicit donations to cover at least part of the cost.

MacNeill made a presentation Tuesday night on the state-of-the-art device that is mounted on a helmet and enables a firefighter to see through thick smoke other firefighters and potential victims. He proposes the department buy one of the special cameras that would probably be used on Engine 1 for the first firefighter on a scene.

"Wherever there's a fire, there's got to be smoke," he said. "We can't even see our hands in front of our faces when we go into a building."

Selectman Merle Brown offered his next monthly selectman's stipend check of $76.31 as an initial donation for the camera. He suggested the request be brought back in the fall if the fund-raising falls short.

Donations may be sent to the Thermal Imaging Fund, c/o the call firefighters, PO Box 251, Cohasset.

Correction is noted

Two previous articles in the Mariner incorrectly quoted Lynn Silva, student services director for Cohasset Public Schools, as saying that special education students account for 16 percent of the annual school budget. Silva actually said that 16 percent of the students in Cohasset schools receive special education services. The Mariner regrets the error.

PLUMBING MUSINGS
by Philip Von Iderstein M.P. #8829

FOURTH GENERATION

I am a fourth generation plumber. "We use toilet water for cologne" is our family motto. My great-grandfather began the family plumbing business before the turn of the twentieth century, working out of a horse-drawn wagon. He fixed windmills and the associated piping, before there was any municipal water supply.

We haven't expanded our horizons much from the times when flushing the toilet was the new technology, but the plumbing trade has provided a decent living for four generations. It seems like everyone in the family is a plumber, was a plumber, or at least worked in the trade for a time. It is a humble trade, but we are all proud of our work.

Great-grandfather was known as Tinker Bailey, because he could fix anything. The story goes...

Thanksgiving morning, 1888, Tinker was fixing the kitchen drain for Becky Cushing. She said, "I heard one of the Bailey Boys is getting married this morning." He replied, "Yes miss, me." "You! My heavens what a preparation!" Old Aunt Sally said that when people heard that story, every one started calling Fred for their plumbing needs, and it was the beginning of the plumbing company.

I grew up with a sense of belonging in my family, my church, my town, and in the business. I don't think many people have that sense of place today.

Selectmen burn the midnight oil

Deeply divided on budget, override

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The hands of the clock inched towards midnight as Town Manager Mark Haddad held his head in his hands.

His recommended $21M total budget, developed after countless hours of meetings and negotiations, hung in the balance as a weary-eyed board of selectmen could not agree to support that number before town meeting.

After hours of poring over other warrant articles and listening to the various proponents make their pitch — the proposed budget number that is in the red by some $766,154 — was the final item of business before the board Tuesday night.

In the end, a majority of selectmen, specifically Chairman Ronnie McMorris, Nan Roth and a reluctant Merle Brown, voted to support the budget and to make up the deficit through a Prop. 2-1/2 override vote at the polls on April 10.

This means, if town meeting okays the budget, voters will be asked to support raising the tax levy by $766K at the ballot box. If the override passes, the taxes on the average Cohasset home valued at $341,000 will increase by $409.35. The override accounts for $276.31 of that increase. The anticipated tax rate for FY2000, which begins July 1, is $16.15 per $1,000 of assessed valuation.

"The sky won't fall if we make reasonable cuts."
— Selectman Tom Callahan

A general override differs from a debt exclusion in that it is a permanent tax increase. A Prop. 2-1/2 debt exclusion override goes away once the debt is paid off.

Selectmen Diane Sullivan and Tom Callahan did not support the proposed budget and override despite Haddad's plea that the selectmen, school committee and advisory committee "be together on this." Haddad had initially recommended a 6 percent school budget increase and less than 3 percent for the town side. But the schools came with just under a 10 percent increase, which forced Haddad's hand because he has no control over the school budget.

Waving a piece of paper on which she'd worked and reworked school budget numbers, Sullivan was adamant that the schools are driving the town into the red. She pleaded with her fellow board members to make some hard decisions.

Callahan said the town is in tough times budget-wise and he recommended $430K be cut out of the total budget.

"The sky won't fall if we make reasonable cuts," he said. "The override will depend if voters have their taxpayer hat or user hat on in the ballot box."

But Roth said selectmen should back up the school department.

"I say we support the school committee budget that the school committee determined it costs to run our schools," she said. "We should give the voters the opportunity to vote on it."

McMorris agreed voters should have the opportunity to support the "excellence we have in our schools."

Vets agent surprised by flak over position

Wants to stay in post

By Constance Pittman Lindner

The local VFW and American Legion posts recent recommendation to replace the town's veteran agent, took Noel Ripley by surprise. That's because Ripley, who has held the position for 12 years, had not heard anything about being replaced prior to the Dec. 19 letter to town manager Mark Haddad and selectmen from the two veterans' groups.

"He is very modest and few individuals are aware of his dedication to veterans, their families and the needs they seek him to resolve."
— Frank C. J. Hamilton, Beechwood Street

"It's the first I've heard of it, as well, when I was approached by Joe McElroy," said town manager Mark Haddad.

Former school committee member Joseph McElroy, a retired Army lieutenant colonel — representing the local VFW and American Legion posts — said that the two veterans organizations unanimously voted for a change of agent. Ripley's term expires June 30. He also proposed a salary compromise to selectmen.

The veterans groups originally requested $5,500 per year instead of the $1,600 annual stipend the veterans' agent has received for the past 22 years. McElroy requested a more moderate $3,600 annual salary for the incoming agent.

Complaints surfaced at VFW and Legion post meetings about Ripley not being in touch with the community, McElroy said.

"This was back around October or November. It was recommended that we get a new veterans' agent and it was unanimously voted on," he said.

A letter from VFW Post 9146 Commander Ralph Perroncello and American Legion Post 118 Commander Steve Wigmore dated Dec. 19, recommended Bruce Butman be appointed veterans' agent as of July 1. They cited the aging population's need for assistance as a reason why the veteran's agent's role is increasingly important to the town. They also requested a $5,500 annual salary.

Cohasset town election season begins in earnest

Last day to register is March 6

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

It's official. Unless someone runs an 11th-hour sticker campaign, there will be just two races in the April 10 town election.

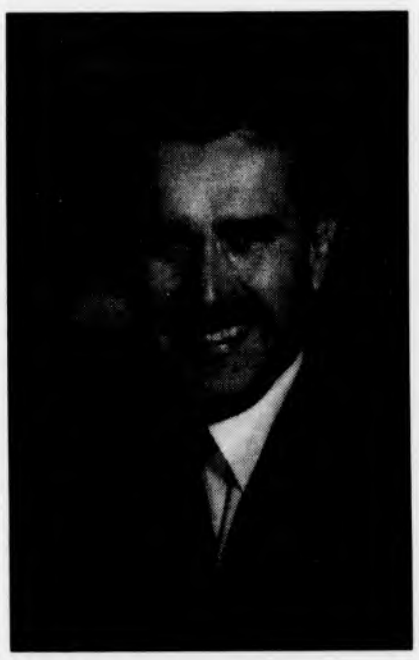
There's a three-way race for two seats on the board of selectmen and a race for an open seat on the board of health.

Frederick Koed, 92 Pleasant St., has jumped out of the starting gate early by already announcing campaign committee chairmen. The former water commissioner and advisory board member is seeking one of the two selectman seats held by incumbents Ronnie McMorris and Nan Roth, who both want a second term.

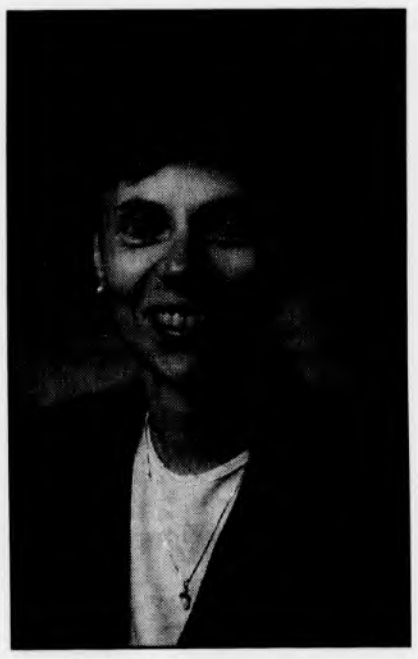
The top two "vote-getters" win the seats.

Roth, who also served on the advisory committee, said she welcomes the competition.

"I think Fred is an excellent candidate and his presence will lead to lots of discussion on town policy," she said.



Fred Koed



Ronnie McMorris

Nan Roth

McMorris, a former conservation commissioner, also said she is ready for the challenge.

"I'm looking forward to a campaign — that's the process," she said.

At late as the beginning of last week it looked as though there were no takers for an open seat on the board of health. Chairman Kevin Ulmer is not seeking a second term. But before Thursday's deadline to obtain nomination papers two candidates came forward. Charles H. Sturdy, 270 Jerusalem Road, and Dr. Robin Lawrence, 15 Beach St., will compete for Ulmer's seat.

A third race did not shape up when Nancy Hertig of 124 Lamberts Lane failed to turn in her nomination papers by Monday's 5 p.m. deadline. That means Mary "Betsy" Connolly of 431A King St. will have no opposition for the one-year vacancy on the school committee created when Joseph McElroy stepped down recently with just one year left on his term. Also, Stephanie Noble, 10 Joy Place, will be unopposed for the seat being vacated by school committee chairman Rick Shea who is not seeking reelection.

Anthony J. Carbone, 72 Church St., has no competition for the seat on the recreation commission held by Shelanne S. Durkin who is not seeking reelection.

Former advisory board chairman Roger Whitley, 11 Cedar Lane, joins incumbents Sheila Evans and Roger Lowe seeking election to the three seats on the board of library trustees.

Raymond Kasperowicz, 172 S. Main St., is running unopposed for Ted Guild's seat on the sewer commission. And William Goode, 269 Atlantic Ave., is unchallenged in his bid for a third term on the planning board.

William Smith, 110 Nichols Road, is seeking a seat on the board of assessors. James Lagrotteria is not seeking reelection.

Newcomer Ann Barrett, 60 Elm St., will run for the housing authority seat held by Betty Grassie who is stepping down.

The following are unopposed in their bids for reelection: Town Moderator George Marlette, Town Clerk Marion Douglas and water commissioner Richard Muncey.

The last day to register for the town election and annual town meeting is Saturday, March 6.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Goodwin, Chatterton to chair Koed campaign committees

Ronnie Goodwin was named chairman of the Committee to Elect Fred Koed Selectman. Clark Chatterton was named chairman of the campaign's finance committee.

"Fred Koed can help provide the leadership we need on the Board of Selectman," said Goodwin, a former member of the Board of Water Commissioners.

Linda Gardner is the Treasurer of the campaign. Contributions can be sent to her, payable to the "Committee to Elect Fred Koed Selectman", at 90 Beechwood St.

Beechwood election supper

The Beechwood Church announces its annual election supper will be held Saturday, March 20, at 6:30 p.m.

The supper provides an opportunity for residents to meet candidates running for town offices in a relaxed, no speeches atmosphere.

Town elections will be held April 10.

Veterans agent is surprised by the flak over position

A Jan. 9 letter from Butman to Haddad described his experience at the American Legion as post chaplain, service officer, post vice commander and membership chairman, as well as his familiarity with area veterans, as qualifications for the position.

Attached to Butman's letter was a description of the hours and salary of area towns' veterans' agents, and a listing of what the veterans agent is supposed to do.

In January, Ripley wrote to selectmen and Haddad about his diminished caseload in the past five years, due to the World War II and Korean War veterans populations needing less financial assistance. He stated that he could see no justification for raising the veterans' agent salary, considering the present work load. Based on Ripley's information, selectmen voted to reject the $5,500 stipend request.

But McElroy told selectmen that the current veterans' agent's caseload is "diminishing" because he has not made his presence visible to local veterans and has too often been unresponsive

Henry Bradley, president of the Massachusetts Veterans Agents Association in Quincy explained that usually town management decides in cases where a veterans' agent loses support.

"It's up to each city and town and it depends if there is any complaint, then how substantiated is that complaint. It's something that's unfortunate that it's come to this,' Bradley said.

Haddad, the town manager, will decide who the new agent will be.

"I've received good and bad feedback on Noel," said Haddad. "Does he have a chance at remaining veterans' agent? Yes. I'm not prejudged to make a decision now. I'll sit down with Noel, the commanders of the Post and VFW and see if we can come to a conclusion, but not until May or June."

"I believe that three-quarters of the veterans don't even know who he is. Why doesn't he meet with us at the VFW or American Legion? Why doesn't he keep anything in the papers to keep us up to date?"

— Ralph Perroncello, commander VFW

Area veterans' agents say that "pro-active" is the buzz word these days, from North Adams to the Cape, but that the job is whatever the agent makes of it and the population demands.

One things veterans would like to see is a quarterly newsletter that would keep veterans informed about current legislation affecting them, said McElroy.

There has been significant legislation passed in the past year which would greatly benefit veterans, particularly if they are middle class in an affluent town like Cohasset, explained Bradley of the Mass. Veterans Association.

Perroncello, the VFW commander, maintains that as World War II and Korean War veterans age, they need more care.

"The taxes are getting higher and pensions don't go up more, so older veterans need more benefits; not to mention Vietnam and Persian Gulf War veterans," he said.

"I believe he's (Ripley) lost communication with veterans in the town of Cohasset," Perroncello said. "I believe that three-quarters of the veterans don't even know who he is. Why doesn't he meet with us at the VFW or American Legion? Why doesn't he keep anything in the papers to keep us up to date?"

But in a recent letter to Haddad, Frank C. J. Hamilton, 244 Beechwood St., gives Ripley high marks.

"He is very modest and few individuals are aware of his dedication to veterans, their families and the needs they seek him to resolve," Hamilton wrote. "He is unselfish and has gone beyond the paperwork to help veterans reestablish their lives.

"...I don't know of many people that could take this part-time position and provide full-time concern," Hamilton said.

Ripley would like to continue the post.

He believes he's done a good job and has kept his home office open to veterans and their families from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., and can always be reached through the town hall.

He said that the most rewarding part of his job has been directing "down-and-out" veterans to the right drug and alcohol or employment program so that they can get back on the right track.

"I feel badly about this," he said. "I've been doing this for 12 years. Of course, anyone can always do more and I would have been happy for suggestions."

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg
Chiropractor

CAUGHT FLATFOOTED

While approximately one school-age child in three has flat feet, over 90% of these children develop normal arches without care by age 10. As for the rest, it is important to differentiate between a congenital, rigid flatfoot and a normal, flexible flatfoot. The chiropractor can do this by observing the child's foot as he or she performs a toe-raise. If the arch remains flat and rigid during this exercise, it indicates a rigid flatfoot that may require care by a specialist. If, on the other hand, an arch is visible as the child stands up on his or her toes, it is indicative of a flexible flatfoot, which will respond to chiropractic care to ensure normal development of the arch.

Are you or any of your family members flatfooted? We strive to keep the public educated about various health issues, feeling that education is the best tool the patient can use to make informed choices. Make the right choice and let SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC help you with safe and gentle chiropractic care. We will only accept you if we sincerely feel chiropractic care can help your specific situation. P.S. It is important to correct foot deformities because the feet act as the foundation upon which the rest of the skeletal system relies for its symmetry and structural integrity.

Cohasset water commission opposes Scituate subdivision

Want land preserved as open space

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The proposed Arrowood Development in Scituate would be a beautiful subdivision if built by the developer. Arrowood would comprise 18 house lots on 50 acres of prime real estate abutting the Wompatuck State Park. And there-in lies the problem. State and local officials believe the subdivision would pose hazards to the environment too severe to ignore. The Cohasset Water Commission is publicly urging the Department of Environmental Management (DEM) to support a plan proposed in Scituate to purchase the land for open space. If purchased, the land would be added to the Wompatuck State Park. There's just one problem — DEM doesn't have the money to purchase Arrowood.

Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said DEM is ready to buy Arrowood, but its capital budget is depleted. The estimated value of the land is $1 million. Cohasset's state representatives are supportive of the project, but their first priority is obtaining money for sea walls in South Shore communities plagued by flooding.

The subdivision is a problem for Cohasset because part of the Aaron River Reservoir strays over the Cohasset town line into Arrowood. Cohasset residents and officials have no official say in what happens in Scituate. Scituate officials oppose the development, but the town's zoning rules allow the subdivision as a matter of right. McNabb said the builders — Walter and Mark Winchester — are excellent contractors who have done much work in Cohasset. The problem is the development's location. The water commissioners are concerned that storm water runoff from the parking lot and lawns could carry car pollutants and other impurities into the Aaron River Reservoir.

"The Arrowood Development, if completed, would present a clear threat to the quality of water in the Aaron River Reservoir," McNabb said. "Two lots of the 18-lot proposed development abut the Aaron River Reservoir. Existing drainage patterns would allow the infusion of new sources of non-point source pollutants such as fertilizers, herbicides, pesticides, motor oil, and gasoline from the development into this critical water supply."

McNabb said he hopes to work with DEM officials to present the funding proposal to the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs (EOEA). McNabb said the funding may need approval from the Legislature as part of a supplemental budget for DEM.

The developers are willing to sell the land if local officials can get the state to approve the money quickly, McNabb said.

Second state grant funds expanded harborwalk study

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Department of Environmental Management (DEM) must love Cohasset. DEM has awarded the town a second $5,000 grant to study ways of connecting the village and the harbor. And the windfall doesn't end there. Local business owner Peter Roy has agreed to supplement the grant with a $3,500 donation to cover the remaining cost of an $8,500 comprehensive plan of options for a proposed harbor walkway.

This new infusion of cash allows members of the Village Revitalization Task Force to expand the scope of the harborwalk study. Task force members hired local architect Jim Shipsky to conduct the first part of the study last year. Shipsky solicited public input, gathered the ideas together and proposed a public walkway from the Hagerty Property to Government Island, continuing along Border Street to Veteran's Memorial Park with a floating boardwalk behind Kimball's to Wheelwright Landing. The walkway would also have a route along Elm Street to the village center and a bike path. All sidewalks along the entire walkway would be paved with red bricks. Planners estimate the cost of the project at $2-3 million.

"The initial grant provided us with conceptual ideas," said Dean Rizzo, task force chairman. "This grant will help us break the harborwalk project into sections and to look at each part in more detail. A more detailed analysis will give us documents with realistic designs and expectations to implement different phases of the harborwalk."

Rizzo said breaking the project into smaller components will direct the task force to different state and federal agencies that provide public funding. At a previous public meeting, some town officials expressed doubt about the feasibility of the entire project. Selectmen Tom Callahan said he didn't want the task force to continue pursuing a project that the town cannot afford to fund. Rizzo said he would not allow the project to be stalled by a lack of funding, pointing out that there are many state and federal grants available for coastal improvement projects.

"We don't expect the town to have the money available to pay for this," Rizzo said.

The grant is one of many components of the village revitalization that are slowly coming to fruition. Work on the Red Lion Inn and the adjacent Lilac House is well under way. Owner Gerde Ordelheide plans to renovate the two properties into a vacation resort. The project is expected to boost interest in the village.

Peter Roy is revitalizing the former Chart House into a new restaurant, Atlantica. Rizzo said the Chart House always attracted people to the waterfront and Atlantica should achieve the same effect.

Autism hits close to home for some local families children with autism. With a growing awareness of the wide range Autism Spectrum encompasses in behavior, treatment and outcome, a relatively new classification has emerged of high-functioning autistics with Asperger's Syndrome (AS).

While school budgets are faced with meeting state-mandated inclusion laws, accommodating special education students' needs has led to a host of new options for children who might have been misdiagnosed in the past and relegated to life's sidelines.

Students diagnosed with this subtype of autism, when followed with care at school and home, has meant that the stereotypical oddities of AS-eccentricities — such as one-sided and lengthy conversations about an unusual topic that holds the fascination of only the AS child; motor clumsiness; an excessive awareness of every sound in the classroom and general distractibility — have been worked on enough to allow a regular education as well as participation in social activities like team sports and other popular childhood pursuits.

The range of abilities for people with autism, as well as how it originally manifests itself, can encompass a life spent in continuous care — 60 percent of people with autism will require assistance through their entire life — or a Ph.D., meaningful work and a full family life. That is why it is a spectrum disorder, as it runs the gamut from the lowest- to the highest-functioning types and subtypes.

"What has the growing understanding of Autism Spectrum Disorder meant?" asked "Julie," a mother of a child with AS. "It means that my child is enjoying team sports. He's learning to read, to write, and to explore the nature of the universe. He wonders why some people are nice and some are not so nice, and why the Backstreet Boys are cool. But a lot of people have worked really hard to get him where he is today."

While the inclusion of special education children has been a challenge for schools who are legally mandated to supply the funds to make this possible, it has been a boon for children with AS.

16 percent

Sixteen percent of the school-age student population in Cohasset public schools receive special education services, and a small number of that group fall somewhere in the Autism Spectrum Disorder sphere.

"You can have any number of children, all of whom are on the autism spectrum, and they may have very different needs and services provided to meet those needs," explained Lynn Silva, director of student services for Cohasset public schools. "That's been the case since the '70s. Special education has evolved, as any new initiative. It takes time to be refined. Two changes that have meant greater strides is that the more medical research learns about the disorder and the more education works with the research to determine what are effective programs and services for children, the better we are able to provide for the needs of those children within our public school programs.

"Federal law certainly encourages us, as does our state law, to try to provide as many supports and services to the children within the general education program prior to considering alternatives within or outside the system."

Theories abound as to what causes autism, ranging from a virus in utero to environmental toxins. High levels of serotonin, also found in Down Syndrome, unipolar disorder (chronic depression without mood swings) and attention deficit/hyperactivity disorder, has been found in autistic subjects. In addition, high levels of beta-endorphins, an opiate-like substance in the body, may bear some relevance among self-injuring autistics.

AS is usually diagnosed later than other autistic types. While most autistic children seem bound for the usual developmental milestones at first, they suddenly veer off into a private world of limited eye contact, repetitive hand motions or compulsive organizing. AS children differ because they are diagnosed later in childhood, usually in the classroom, where changes in the environment and regular classroom activity can these children into a state of sensory overload.

Misreading situations is common for AS children, who can have difficulty negotiating social situations. They can be literal and too honest. They may have trouble figuring out what to do if someone tells them to "get lost," or what to do if someone is sitting at their regular cafeteria seat. To an AS child, it could be unclear where to "get lost" to and even considering what other seat to take is overwhelming. Rather than discuss this with parents, the child may state that they hate school and will never go back.

Similarities

AS children's symptoms can appear similar to Attention Deficit Disorder, with or without Hyperactivity, because both populations show difficulty sustaining attention. AS children are distracted by irrelevant stimuli such as the teacher's hand movements or other children shifting in their seats, or worrying obsessively about what will be expected socially, say, during lunch time.

Stress can be chronic and severe for these bright children, who need strategies to help them deal with daily distresses that are part an average day for other children.

Some of the local support groups that have helped parents help their children-and themselves, in the bargain-were begun with the help of Jan Randall, a Parent Resource Specialist at Community Autism Resources (Adsum) in Fall River. Randall helps organize community groups dealing with Autism Spectrum disorders, such as one the monthly groups that now take place in a conference room in Shaw's on 3A in Cohasset and one in Hingham which takes place in the public library there.

"The Hingham group has been amazing in helping so many of us deal with these issues," said "Julie." "Parents know their children, and many of us always knew that our children could communicate. All of us-mothers and fathers-are fighters, committed to our children and each others' children."

Anne Reel, who coordinates the monthly Asberger's support group in Cohasset, notes that many parents from different South Shore groups will run into each other at conferences which they travel to for the latest information. (See list of agencies, support groups, books and web sites below.)

"Families come from Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Rockland, Braintree, Weymouth, Scituate — all over," she said. "We call ourselves the South Shore Coastal Support Group. There is a kind of core group that keeps the group going."

Another monthly support group meets in the Hingham Public Library. Katherine Mayes coordinates the meetings, which bring parents of children with Autism Spectrum Disorder up to date on the latest research and parenting tips. A resource library related to the disorder is kept on hand for group members.

Like the other groups that have formed over the past few years, the parents that participate read voraciously on the subject and take some comfort in knowing that their child has been diagnosed at a time where so much more is understood about the types and subtypes of autism.

They listen to lectures from delivered by experts in the field, view films demonstrating early intervention techniques, and learn how to prepare trusts for their children.

"What these meetings do for parents is that it gives newly diagnosed families a chance for help, support and guidance and it gives everyone an opportunity to share information and get training on how to help their children," said Mayes. "The Cohasset group coordinated by Anne Reel works on the same principle.

"There is all kinds of really wonderful research being done and excellent strategies concerning early diagnosis and early, intense treatment," she said.

Reel agrees. "Many of these children are struggling to learn a first language, never mind all the social nuance behind it once they acquire the basics," she said. "We're learning how these children need to be guided in advance of an occasion about what to expect of others and themselves in that situation and we're also learning more about how they perceive situations."

Mayes is especially pleased with the groups' success stories.

"We've had some late victories, too, such as a 35-year-old Hull woman who had a new intervention done on her and she suddenly had verbal language," she said. "Her parents knew she had autism, but they had assumed that there was no possibility of help. She can now manage her own finances, learn things on the computer and she receives money through state funding. The latest information can help our children and it can also work retroactively, helping people that were thought to be beyond help in the past."

Working at the Paul Pratt library is a labor of love

For three women named 'Sue'

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

On entering the vestibule of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on South Main Street, you can almost smell the decades of card catalogues and glue, the sounds of pencil on paper, softly turned pages and the light crackle of cellophane book covers. Surely, a "schoolmarmish" librarian will say, "Shhhh...," or, "No talking," or "You mean, you don't know how to use the microfiche?"

"We never say, "Shhhh..." and we don't have microfiche - both things are passé," said Suzanne Terry, children's librarian at the library for 13 years. "We have computers and even when I started, those big vinyl 38 records were making way for tapes and eventually, CDs."

The library is small but the hours are long, which means there is a coverage issue. That's especially the case on Monday and Tuesday, when the library hours are from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

With so many duties to attend to, only three of the five full-time staffers are able to attend the front desk, reference and children's sections and coincidentally, they're all named Sue.

"We all call each other Sue," said Susan Pope, who has an easy camaraderie with fellow librarians Sue Watrous and Suzanne Terry. "Just ask for one of the Sues, and you'll get one of us.

"Sue Watrous is blonde, Suzanne Terry is the shortest and I am... strikingly beautiful," she laughed. "But really, people seem pleased with whichever Sue they get, so we all continue to go by Sue."

Pope, who became a librarian at age 21, did so, she said, because, "What did I know?",

Her library career began while she was still attending college and landed a job at the Boston Public Library.

"That was fine," she said. "I got into it at the right time. I was never exposed to the shhhh-type of librarian. I worked in Brookline, too, which was also a free-thinking library. Then I came here."

"Just ask for one of the Sues, and you'll get one of us."
— Susan Pope, librarian

Watrous, who answered a job advertisement for the librarian spot back in April of 1970 explained that libraries are more social now.

"It's very enjoyable getting to know the townspeople," she said. "It's very lovely. I think people are much more relaxed, especially here. It's very nice."

Watrous isn't alone in her enjoyment of the locals who sometimes hang about the front desk for a chat about the merits of a current best-seller, a request for a long-desired book to be put on hold, or who need some directions while navigating the Internet.

Watrous considers associating with visitors to be the best part of her job; Terry agrees. "I think the best part would have to be working with the people," she said.

The same goes for Pope, who says that the interchange with people is her favorite part of the job.

"Children, teenagers, adults, seniors — I like 'em all," she said. "You learn from everyone; there is always a little pearl."

The average day for these library ladies includes taking care of the books — making sure that the high school employees re-shelf books, helping in the reference area and working with the children.

Keeping current offerings vital and interesting is another part of the job.

Classes in arts and crafts, lecture series, film series, children's programs and story hours are only some of the opportunities at the library. Visitors can take in art exhibits, use the computers, regain their passion for reading with large print books or listen to books on tape. And of course, there is access to the Internet.

Library director Janet Husband, who came on board about six months ago, says she's never worked with three Sues before. But she said staff and volunteers who want one of the Sues have a system.

"We ask for Suzanne, Susan or Sue — if we want one in particular," Husband laughs.

If there is a downside to their work, the Sues are hard-pressed to name it.

"I really can't think of any downside, said Pope. But for Watrous, discarding books is, if not a downside, than it's her least favorite part of the job. "I hate to see the books go," she said, adding, "which reminds me that ordering books are another favorite part of my job. Book reviews generally decide us on what to choose - mostly books I wish I had time to read!"

So if you haven't been to the library lately for whatever reason - overdue books, computer anxiety or difficulty reading despite those new glasses — just stop in and ask for Sue.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Clinton, nation must move on

Well, the impeachment proceedings involving President Clinton finally appear to be over. More indisputable proof that there is, indeed, a God.

In all seriousness, now that the entire matter-which seemingly began months, years, or perhaps even eons ago-apparently has been put to rest, Clinton can turn his full attention to running the country. A good thing, one supposes, since that's what he was elected to do.

Still, looking back, two things about the scandal strike me as being peculiar.

The first is the reaction of the American people. For only the second time in the nation's history, a president was impeached. Not only is that both a major disgrace and a historical event of considerable proportions, there was for some time a distinct possibility that the man could have been thrown out of office. The Senate could have done so if the votes had been there.

And the American people reacted with a collective yawn. Interviews published in newspapers and televised during local and national broadcasts made it clear: nobody cared. At least not that much.

If that aspect of the public's reaction wasn't unusual enough, there were also the opinion polls. After being embroiled in scandal every day for what seemed like forever, Clinton emerged more popular than ever. One well-publicized poll had him topping Pope John Paul II as the most admired man in the world.

But the second thing I found peculiar might have been partially responsible for the people's position: the media's coverage of the proceedings.

While the Republican's attack on the president was no doubt personal, they appeared to have legitimate reasons for going after him: perjury, obstruction of justice, etc.

So what did the media give the people? Monica, Monica, Monica.

In what was easily the worst case of overkill since the O.J. Simpson trial, those in the media kept hammering away at Clinton's relationship with the former White House intern. For example, the Boston Globe, arguably the most respected newspaper in New England, devoted an entire section to Lewinsky's grand jury testimony.(What a waste of ink.) And while anyone with anything resembling moral standards would be a little offended by the (married) president's actions with a girl barely older than his own daughter, people realized that the affair alone was not an impeachable offense.

The media, therefore, can be blamed in part for what people were thinking. By failing to fully educate the people about the importance of the impeachment proceedings, as well as the legitimate reasons behind them, the broadcast and print media alike dropped the ball.

Anyway, it appears to be over now, and not a moment to soon. Democrats and Republicans alike have pledged to begin anew and work together on issues such as the preservation of Social Security.

But while we all must move on, this was a story that will be remembered for a long, long time-by those in government, those in the media, and those in the American public. And while we hopefully have all learned something from it, only the future will tell.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sewer facts clarified

To The Editor:

While watching the Selectman's meeting with the Water Commissioner on February 23 on television, I was surprised by certain statements by the Selectmen and Town Manager and immediately drove to Town Hall to protest certain misrepresentations of facts with regard to the North Cohasset sewer project.

In early 1997, the Selectmen impeded, obstructed and finally canceled Contract Two for the North Cohasset sewer service area. This ill-advised act cost the taxpayers and the residents of North Cohasset in excess of $50,000. Specifically, the bids came in as follows:

- Original low bid (Dec. 97) $4,147,959
- Rebid low bid (Oct. 98) $4,188,231
- Increase in contract cost on rebid $40,272
- Plus fee to cancel the original award $9,688
- Plus costs to rebid (re-advertise) $320

Total cost to taxpayers and users $50,280

While it is correct that the sewer commissioners were later able to reduce the total contract price by substituting the less expensive Interon pumps, the fact remains that the final contract price was too high by more than $50,000 due to the Selectmen's unfortunate and ill-advised action.

Critics call for special education system reform

ED REFORM:
6 Years Later
— CHAPTER 4 —

By Chris Szechenyi
CNC PROJECTS EDITOR

The Massachusetts Department of Education is under attack for failing to pay its fair share of the real cost of special education for children with disabilities.

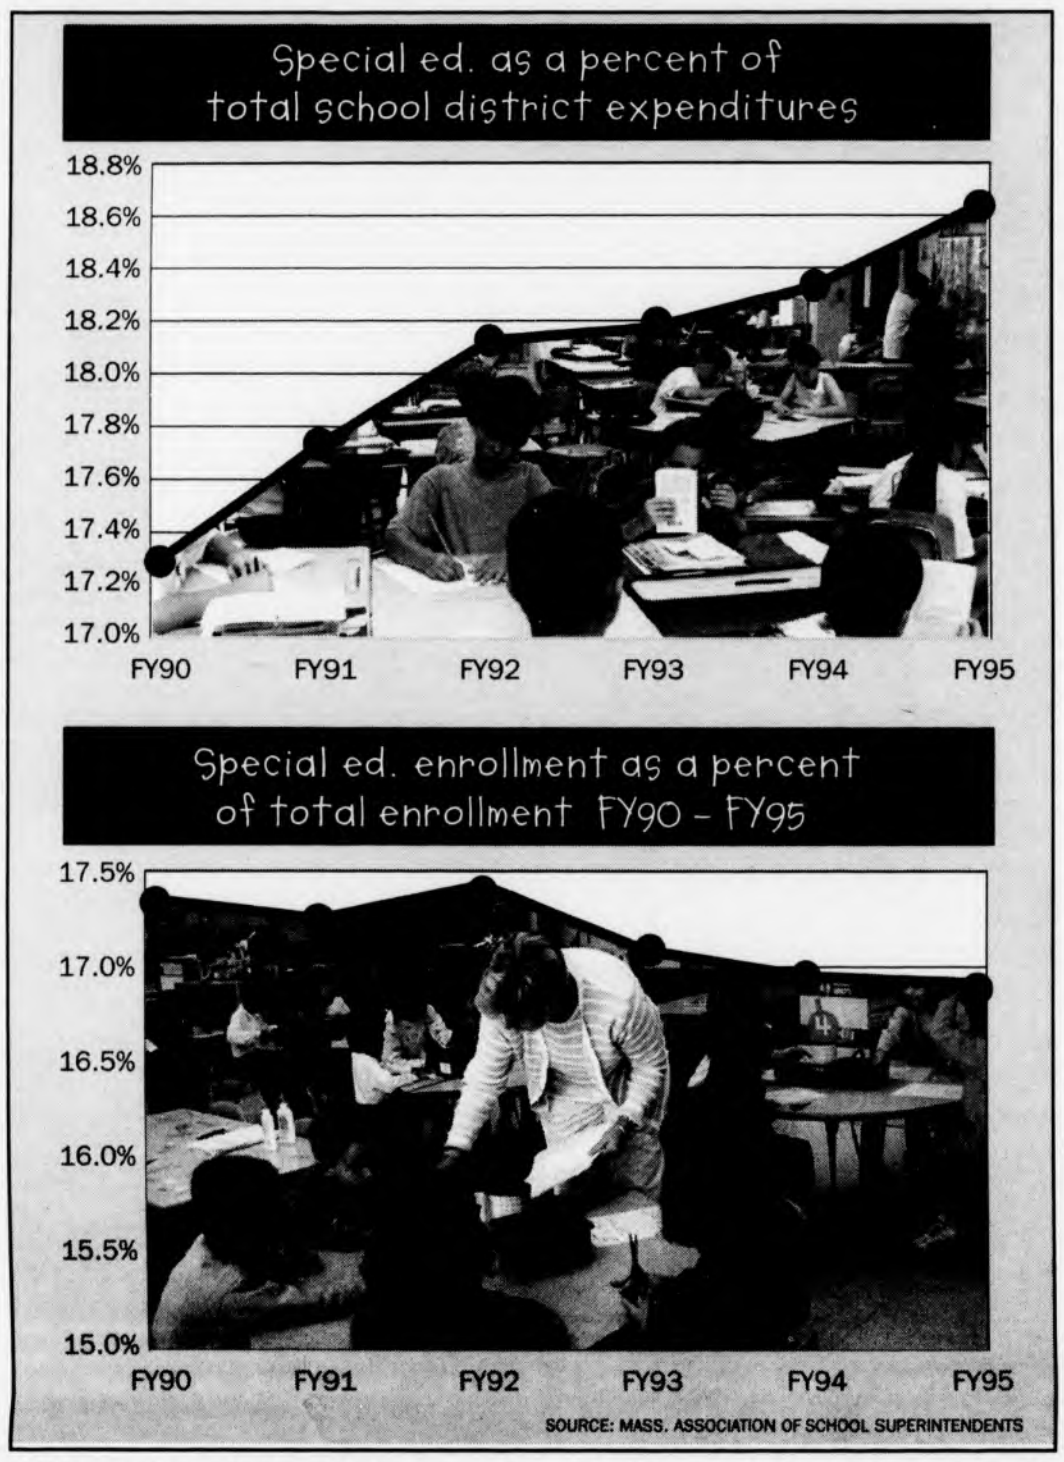
In addition, the state's program is hobbled by a long list of problems that undermines its ability to serve its own clients - and also threatens the progress of regular school programs, according to many education experts, school administrators and parents. Among their charges:

- The soaring costs of special education are erasing the gains made by many school districts under the 1993 Education Reform Act.
- While Massachusetts sets one of the highest standards for special education programs in the nation, it pays only a fraction of the cost, leaving school districts to scramble for resources - and sparking charges that regular school programs are being shortchanged as a result.
- After a few years of flat enrollment, the number of children who need special education currently in preschool and early intervention programs promises a new round of dramatic increases in the costs to local school districts.
- In addition, the program is expected to flunk a review by the U.S. Department of Education underway this week because of inequities in the funding formula, according to a top state official.

Today, special education has ballooned into a $1.2 billion program that serves 159,000 children, who represent 16.6 percent of the total number of children enrolled in public schools. That is the second highest enrollment rate in the country and stands twice as high as the percentage of special education students in Massachusetts just 24 years ago.

But it is not just the scale of the enterprise that has sparked criticism. How the costs are divided up between the state and the local school systems is causing even more controversy. The state pays just 17 percent of the total cost, while school districts pay 76 percent, according to the Center for Special Education Finance in California. That contrasts sharply with the national picture.

Across the county, other states pay on average 53 percent of the total tab and local schools pay 40 percent. In both cases, the federal government picks up the balance. "We can't continue on with the system we have now," said Perry Davis, president of the Massachusetts Association of School Superintendents, which is releasing a new study of the problem this week. "It places a heavy financial burden on some communities. The question is how do we provide special education services for all children and not pin it on the resources of schools at the local level?"



Unrealistic funding formula

Adding yet another level of frustration to local school administrators is a rigid state funding formula that reimburses them, not for the actual numbers of students in special education or the real cost of their programs, but at an arbitrary rate. The state assumes that just 15 percent of a school's students receive special education.

In fact, the real proportion of special needs students can rise as high as 25 percent, as it does currently in Cambridge and Watertown.

School systems must provide programs to students, under the terms of Chapter 766 of the state's law code. But they only get reimbursed according to a fixed formula, rather than the actual cost of children they must serve. That means a heavy financial burden falls on the community, and painful choices sometimes have to be made to cover the costs.

Some argue that the formula actually increases the number of children who need special education.

"As children are referred to separate special education programs, fewer resources remain to support general education, causing more students to fall through the cracks, leading to even more special education referrals," said James A. Peyser, a candidate for the job of commissioner of education for the state.

Despite that vicious cycle, the 15 percent figure, which was set by the 1993 Education Reform Act, was not included by miscalculation.

"That's by design," said Edward Moscovitch, an economist who helped write the formula. "We could have put in the actual number instead of an assumed number, but we deliberately said we don't want districts to have an incentive to enroll more students in special education."

Yet that sparks the fight for resources that pits parent against parent, and parent against school administrator.

"In order for us to fund special needs, we have to cannibalize our other programs," said Michael Hourigan, a school committee member in Needham, where schools have curtailed some music, art and physical education programs. "What the state has done is create competition for limited resources and that creates bad feelings between parents. It's unfortun[illegible] The law has helped thousands of kids, but parents lose sight of that because all they talk about is cost, cost, cost and not the value of the system."

In specific, a new report scheduled for release this week shows that in nearly 100 school districts, the rising cost of special education has erased all the financial benefits received under the Education Reform Act of 1993. Another 74 school districts have spent between 50 percent and 99 percent of their education reform dollars on special education.

"The state clearly has not held up its end when it comes to funding of special education," said Margaret Reed, head of special education for Holliston's public schools.

Holliston is just one of the towns that has seen some of its gains under Education Reform go to pay for state-mandated special education program costs, according to the superintendents' reportt.

One part of the program that hits home with particular force - although it includes only 3 percent of special needs students - is the extraordinarily high cost of out-of-district residential programs. The state pays half the bill for these services, which can cost as much as $200,000 a year in tuition for a single child.

That funding formula not only causes painful choices, it is also in violation of the federal Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, which states that students must be placed in the least restrictive learning environment possible.

The state's funding method means, theoretically, that a child whose education will cost $50,000 a year represents a state reimbursement to a school of $25,000 in a residential program and only $8,500 on average if he or she is "mainstreamed" in the local school. That can influence a school's decision to put a child into a residential program who would be best served in the local school

"I think the way the state does these things puts towns in a terrible situation," said Leslie Lockhart, a resident of Newton, whose daughter Julie, a 14-year-old student at Newton's Day Middle School, has cerebral palsy.

One veteran of special education services who can attest to the value of programs that keep students in the mainstream is Jan Tobin, an Arlington resident whose daughter Katie was born with Down's Syndrome.

Despite her disability, Katie attends regular classrooms at Arlington's Ottoson Junior High School. Now in seventh grade, she has been in regular classrooms since kindergarten, with extra assistance from a tutor who helps make sure Katie understands the curriculum.

"We've figured out how Katie learns, said Jan Tobin. "She does very well. She socializes with her peers, she participates in gymnastics, Girl Scouts and the swim team. Katie made the honor roll last term. She's very motivated."

She is not the only member of the family who has had to be motivated, however.

How the law works

Under Chapter 766 of the state legal code, any child who fails to make effective progress in school as a result of problems rooted in physical, emotional, learning, communication, intellectual, neurological, sensory, developmental or health disabilities may be eligible for special education.

Any teacher, parent or other person - a therapist, for example - may request that a child's condition be assessed. The school must then evaluate that child within 30 days of obtaining parents' consent.

Within 15 school days of the evaluation, a team of experts must then decide if a student is eligible for special education, and if so, start to develop an individual education plan, known as an IEP. Within another 30 calendar days, a parent must be given an IEP for consideration or appeal.

In Massachusetts, Chapter 766 requires school districts to provide children with a free and appropriate special education that leads to their "maximum possible development." The law also requires them to produce semi-annual progress reports on each student with special needs, an annual review of each individual education plan and a three year reevaluation of that student's progress.

A federal law, called the Individual with Disabilities Education Act, lists 14 categories of disabilities that qualify a child for special education. It requires a "free and appropriate public education," a less demanding standard than the one in effect in Massachusetts.

At a minimum, the state must abide by the federal law and it must monitor schools to make sure they're complying with its requirements.

Parents make appeal for inclusion

ED REFORM:
6 Years Later
— CHAPTER 4 —

Ginny Swain's son Bar was born with severe mental retardation, but he has participated in mainstream classrooms at the Haggerty School in Cambridge for the past six years.

During a recent school day, he sat in a classroom filled with other students, learning about the geography of Africa.

Bar lacks the same physical skills as his fellow students - even holding a pen is a challenge for him - but his parents are convinced he has excelled by being included in regular classes.

"It's startling," his mom said. "There's really something different happening at Haggerty."

Since he started going to Haggerty in kindergarten, Bar's abilities to express himself have improved. And, according to his mother, so have Bar's "normal social behaviors, like being able to wait his turn and carry his own tray in the cafeteria and being able to listen to his teacher."

As Bar walks from class to class, other students offer him an arm to hold.

"I think he's made enormous progress," Ginny Swain said. "He's a great deal more normalized" than when he attended a special school devoted to children with disabilities.

This progress came at a price.

Ginny and her husband, Bob, had to fight to have Bar included in the mainstream and they had to fight to secure the help of an "inclusion specialist," paid for by the Cambridge School Department, who is at the school every day to help Bar navigate the curriculum. Before he entered Haggerty, Bar had attended the Kennedy Day School at Franciscan Children's Hospital in Brighton.

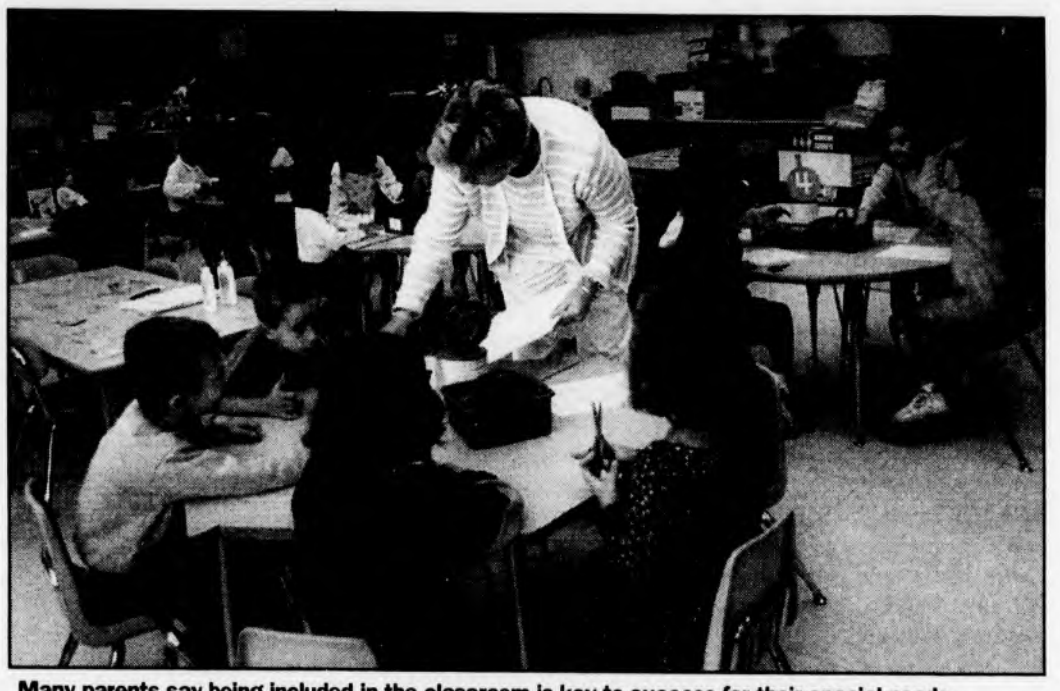
"We thought he could learn more from kids his age than from [even] excellent therapists at Kennedy," Ginny explained. "The expectations in public school are higher. When you're in a situation where kids don't walk and talk, that becomes the norm."

Bar transferred to Haggerty without opposition from the school department - but Cambridge declined to provide him with the full time specialist who had the experience and training to work with a child like Bar.

"They were saying 'we can't afford it. We'll get a consultant in for a few hours a week,'" Ginny recalled.

"We had a full-time teacher there for him, but that person didn't feel like they had the qualifications to address his needs," said Ellen Willard, acting director of special education for Cambridge schools. " I told them to appeal the case - then we will be able to do what we need to do to support Bar. We needed that leverage to get that position. And it worked."

The Swains did appeal the case to the state and asked for a hearing. They demanded a specialist who would help ensure Bar's maximum feasible development.



Many parents say being included in the classroom is key to success for their special needs children.

Parents and schools fail to agree with increasing frequency about how to best serve the special needs of children in Massachusetts. The number of requests for independent hearings jumped from 359 in the 1986/87 school year to 603 last year, according to the Massachusetts Department of Education. Of those 603 hearings that were requested, 21 resulted in decisions that favored the school. Parents won in nine cases, and the majority were settled by compromise through mediation.

In the Swains' case, the appeal was successful. The hearing officer ordered Cambridge to provide Bar with a specialist without regard to cost.

Today that specialist, Harla Yessner, not only helps shape a special curriculum for Bar, but she handles about a dozen other children with special needs at Haggerty. She helps to train teachers, coordinates therapy for her young clients and makes sure their individual education plans are carried out.

Not everyone sees the story of Bar Swain as a victory.

In fact, the strict mandates of the law that governs special education has been blamed for the increasing costs of the program across the state.

"The web of bureaucracy and regulatory procedures designed to protect and enforce these rights ensures that special education programs are self-perpetuating," said James Peyser, executive director of the Pioneer Institute, a Boston think tank, and a finalist for the top job in the state Department of Education.

But to parents like Ginny Swain and others, like Drew Parkin, the law is a powerful tool they can use to protect and serve their children.

"I look at this as a civil rights thing," Swain said.

Parkin also has a success story about the value of mainstreaming.

His son, John, 10, has cerebral palsy. He was busy making Viking crests out of aluminum foil and learning the alphabet on the computer during a recent school day.

When John entered Haggerty in kindergarten, he remained in his wheelchair. Today he walks everywhere he goes.

"The kids encourage him," his father said. "Being with a typical group of kids is really good for him."

Because Cambridge's Haggerty School has become so successful at including children with special needs, it has become something of a magnet. Out of the 260 pupils attending the school, 39 are "atypical," according to its principal, Joe Petner.

"We are attempting to be all things to all people," he said. "We are on the leading edge."

But it is not as simple as articulating that vision. The bureaucratic (and financial realities) remain an issue.

"We're going to have some budget planning sessions soon," said Willard, who noted that 24 percent of children in Cambridge schools are in some form of special education program, for a total budget of $7.3 million. "We have to figure out how to cut $200,000 from special education. So we have to figure out how to expand inclusion programs with a declining budget. That's really the trick."

Critics call for reform of special ed. system

Several years ago, Jan Tobin had to work to convince the local school system that it made sense to keep her daughter in regular classes. That was because Katie's progress has come at a price - the salary of that tutor who assists several special needs students in addition to Katie.

The Tobin's battle illustrates one of the issues that federal overseers are here this week to evaluate.

To make sure that students like Katie remain in the classroom, the U.S Department of Education is analyzing how the funding formula actually affects special education students. Ruth Ryder, director of the federal agency's monitoring division, said teams will be visiting schools in Boston, Cambridge, Falmouth, Nahant, Sandwich, Worcester and on the North Shore this week.

The results may be expensive. At risk is as much as $100 million in federal funding, which could be in jeopardy if the state is found out of compliance with the federal law.

"At this point we are not considering withholding funds from the state," Ryder said. "We haven't found non-compliance yet. We'll be making decisions after visiting the state."

If the need to comply with the federal government is the most recent news in special education, the bigger story for the state's school systems has been the steady growth of the cost of special education. While the percentage of students labeled special needs has dropped slightly, the cost, on average, for each special needs student has jumped 40 percent between 1990 and 1997 - twice the rate of the cost increase for students in regular classes.

The cause of the problem

No one knows why so many children are requiring more expensive programs, although John Silber, chairman of the State Board of Education, blames the problem in part on abuse of the system by parents who want to put children in programs they don't truly need.

"There are people who have behavioral problems that don't have anything to do with learning disabilities, who are manipulating the school system," Silber said in a recent interview. "I think it's subject to abuse. You know perfectly well that we haven't had a collapse in the gene pool."

But not everyone agrees.

Doctors and other experts have attributed the sharp increase in the numbers of special needs students and in the severity of their needs to many factors, including advances in medical technology that has led to the survival of an increasing number of children with severe disabilities. Increased numbers of children in poverty and in foster care have also been suggested as factors in the increase.

In addition, psychologists and therapists have identified more disorders and syndromes that require attention. As a result, superintendents are bracing themselves for a new wave of young children who have been identified as having special needs.

Whatever the reason, at least one expert dismissed Silber's charge that abuse is driving the numbers.

"There's a rigorous test for determining who's eligible for special education services," said Julia Landau, an attorney with the Mass Advocacy center in Boston, which assists parents of children with disabilities.

To address the problems of special education. two key measures have been filed in the State House, each offering a new funding formula

In the House, state Rep. Harold Lane, D-Holden, and state Rep. Lida Harkins, D-Needham, have proposed a bill that would change the formula and add about $20 million to state spending on the program. In the Senate, state Sen. Robert Antonioni, D-Leominster, has filed a measure that would also alter the formula at an estimated cost of $60 million. (See related story.)

But neither bill is likely to be passed in its current form because legislators are divided over special education standards - whether to provide "a free and appropriate education," which is the current federal standard applied in most states, or the "maximum feasible development," which is the current standard in Massachusetts.

That issue must be resolved before legislators will address the basic funding problems, according to several legislators and their aides. Critics of the program and its funding are growing impatient for a solution.

"This shouldn't be a divisive issue," said Perry Davis of the state superintendents association. "It's an equity issue. We need to adopt a strategy of no matter where a child lives, he or she should not be such a burden on that school that other children suffer. We need to share the burden more equitably in a broader tax base. One of the most hurtful things in a community is that when the budget's tight, people start blaming disabled kids for not having resources like computers."

Part III: Budget Busters

Chapter 766 (SPED) urgently needs legislative "tweaking" before there is a counter-productive backlash. Such an overreaction would be a tragedy because the "up-front" investment in SPED, through early intervention and Individualized Educational Plans (IEP's), has dramatically mitigated the impact of learning disabilities. SPED has provided crucial help to families and has benefited society by realizing the potential of many youngsters. You now see many learning disabled persons gainfully employed and enjoying life. Only 25 years ago, they would have lived behind drawn curtains, unproductive and their lives marginalized.

Unfortunately, Massachusetts' legislation went too far and has established a standard that has fostered abuses. A cottage industry of lawyers has sprung up who successfully impose unreasonable demands on local school districts. The other 49 states require "free and appropriate" education for the learning disabled. Massachusetts has legislated that school districts must offer services to realize "maximum possible development." The standard of "maximum possible development" is a lawyer's dream because it imposes no limits. Similarly, the current eligibility criteria of a "child with special needs" is too broad and needs to be changed to a "child with disabilities." A series by the Boston Globe, "Special Ed, a System Disabled," cited an estimate that five out of six clients are not disabled in the way the law envisioned. On top of that, the supporting medical evaluations are done in a haphazard manner. It permits parents to "shop" until they can find a doctor who will word his diagnosis in a manner suitable to the family's attorney. This "shopping" is totally different than the federal government's system. For example, the Veterans' Administration requires applicants to be evaluated by VA doctors.

Massachusetts' excessively liberal legislation has resulted in the highest percentage enrollment of any state in the nation. At the same time, Massachusetts ranks 45th out of the 50 states in Chapter 766 financial aid. In Massachusetts, local school districts pay about 76 percent of SPED costs as contrasted with the national average of 40 percent. The result has devastated school district budgets across the Commonwealth. Cohasset's SPED budget has increased at a 15-percent per annum rate since fiscal year 1993. If this continues, SPED will exceed the rest of the district's budget by the year 2012.

In Massachusetts, local school districts pay about 76 percent of SPED costs as contrasted with the national average of 40 percent. The result has devastated school district budgets across the Commonwealth.

Young people from age 3 to 22 are eligible for Chapter 766 assistance. For some parents, it has become a subsidy for childcare. As usual, Cohasset has had a huge cost overrun for the current school year. The current cost overrun of approximately $275,000 involves 11 unprojected out-of-district placements. The state shares 50 percent of out-of-district placement costs which means that the average cost per student is $50,000. No one can accurately document the total cost of SPED in the Cohasset School District. However, it is safe to state that SPED exceeds 25 percent of the district's budget. This year, the spring annual town meeting will be asked to divert $150,000 in long-overdue technology funding to offset the SPED cost overrun. Currently, the school district is valiantly trying to implement an "inclusion model" intended to mainstream the learning disabled. This effort is valid, but it is putting tremendous pressure on many classroom teachers. It is fair to ask whether other students are being short-changed.

The South Shore Collaborative supports Cohasset and about 10 neighboring towns for clients with severe learning disabilities. Undoubtedly, it does fine work, but how diligently does it manage Cohasset's contribution to their budget? It is as much a mystery to me now as the day I was elected to the school committee.

What can we do? Perhaps ages 3-4, and 19-21 should be fully financed by the state and/or Medicare/Medicaid. Should parents contribute [illegible] percent for costs associated with early intervention and summer schooling? Should there be a "needs" test? Certainly, the state should contribute at least 50 percent of all SPED programmatic costs. It's incredible that the state Department of Education, Massachusetts Association of School Committees, Massachusetts Association of School Superintendents and the Massachusetts Teachers Association all endorse the "free and appropriate" standard, but are thwarted by strident advocacy groups.

A meeting with local legislators is scheduled for 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, March 2, in the high school auditorium. You have only yourself to blame if you don't attend and make your views known.

This is the third in an eight-part series of columns by former school committee member Joseph R. McElroy. Mr. McElroy is speaking as a private citizen and not for the school committee.

Open forum on special education

The Cohasset Parents Advisory Council is sponsoring an open forum on issues relating to proposed changes to special education funding. The keynote speakers are Sen. Steve Tolman and Attorney Tim Sindelar, director and chief council of the Disability Law Center, and other individuals who are involved with special education/school funding. This forum will be held Tuesday, March 2, at the Cohasset High School auditorium, 143 Pond St., Cohasset, at 7:30 p.m.

Tolman will discuss the bill he will be filing in the legislature regarding special education and funding. The cities and towns of Massachusetts need additional funding to offset the spiraling costs related to education. The proposed bill, if passed, will supply this much needed relief to our school systems.

Parents, educators, administrators, town officials and other concerned individuals are invited to attend this forum, which will include a question and answer session following the panel's presentation. For more information or directions to the school, call Co-chairs, Maureen Jerz at (781) 383-6592, or Kim Maynard at (781) 383-2707.

A year of learning for Skipper basketball

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Any season in which a team's performance is not up to par or expectations is a frustrating season.

Cohasset, who finished the year at 4-16, has lost by twenty and they've lost in triple overtime. It is accurate to say that theirs has been a disappointing season.

But Coach Ron Ford drew a distinction between a disappointing record and a disappointing team.

"We have a disappointing record, but I'm not disappointed with the team. They played very hard, but they just weren't that experienced. I played a lot of young kids this year."

Some of those young kids are sophomores and some of them experienced more than just a taste of varsity basketball.

This at a time when most of their classmates are playing a unique brand of the sport found only at the junior varsity level.

Sophomores Daniel Trowers, T.J. Bilodeau, and Erik Shea all enjoyed significant varsity action this season.

Juniors like Khalil Madyuin, Matt O'Reilly, Craig Parker, and Kevin Andrews also saw solid minutes on varsity.

Madyun and Parker both stand well over six feet and combine to form what could be a promising "twin towers" line-up next season.

O'Reilly, a transfer from Duxbury, has a sweet shot and a nose for the basket, while Andrews' outside shot should see more time next year.

Ford points to the opportunity to develop these youngsters as one of the major upsides of the season.

"I'm bringing back six or seven kids with significant experience. With that alone, we're going to get better. I'm lining up the type of experience that can compete for a league championship.

As a coaching staff, we're fairly confident that if these kids work hard enough, we'll be at that level."

Another major upside of the season was the performance and leadership of senior Jamie DeMichele. A three sport standout, DeMichele captained the Skippers in basketball and will during lacrosse season as well.

He was elected unanimously to the South Shore League All-Star team, which played last Friday, and represented Cohasset well, pouring in eleven points.

"I'm extremely proud of Jamie. I feel bad that he could never play for a great team here. The other coaches around the league have a lot of respect for him," said Ford.

Other members of the senior class also played well. Paul Hussey, Alex Russell, and Ivan Cosme all worked hard for Cohasset this year.

Cosme was chosen to compete in the league's three-point contest and finished second after a dazzling come-from-behind first round.

Russell was a joy to watch this year, as his hustle often found him on the floor or in the stands.

Fan favorite Paul Hussey never failed to fire up the Skipper faithful in the top rows of the stands.

The team practiced hard and played hard and deserved better than their record indicates.

Ford commented that he hated losing for it's own sake, but hated losing this year "because I hated watching these kids lose...This year was fun. I can't say I didn't have a good time."

Making it through a season such as theirs is difficult, but the Boys in Blue played their last games just as hard as they played their first.

Indoor soccer is all the rage

Cohasset girls soccer continues to blossom throughout these cold winter months. The Cohasset Crew, Girls under 16 soccer team, is moving through it's first ever season at the South Shore Sports Center in Hingham.

Although it took a few games for the girls to become comfortable with the different indoor rules, they have had an excellent initial campaign, sporting a solid 3-3 record, and taking a firm hold on 3rd place in the league.

With one game left to play in the regular season, a good play-off position seems assured.

The school break week was a busy week for the Cohasset Crew, as they played 3 games. On Sunday, February 14th, they took on the tough Braintree Renegades.

Coached for this game by Bill Grimm, the Crew put on their strongest performance of the year for an exciting 6-2 victory.

Single goals were scored by Maggie O'Neil and Ana Jane Murphy, while both Yasmin Afshar and Katie Grimm scored 2 goals each.

Besides scoring goals, Yasmin Afshar and Ana Jane Murphy also shared the duty in goal, and performed extremely well.

Caitlin Flint anchored the Crew defense, giving her goalies a lot of support.

On Thursday, February 18th, the Crew had to show up for a 6:00AM game.

Amazingly, nine hearty souls appeared ready to play. However, little effort was necessary for this victory, as only two Killer Bees from Hingham could get out of bed to answer the bell.

As a result, the Crew won the game by forfeit.

Hey, a win is a win.

On Sunday, February 21st, the Crew had a rematch with an undefeated Braintree team. Unfortunately, Braintree is still undefeated.

However, the Crew played a game that was definitely better than the score of 9-1 would indicate. They were particularly strong in the second half, scoring their loan goal, while giving up only 2 goals to a skilled and experienced Braintree team.

Julie Lordon was a star in the goal in the second half, making many difficult saves. The Crew's goal was scored on a bullet shot by Kerry McCarthy, who only moments before had been denied when another hard shot beat the goalie but hit the post.

New look for Seahawk youth hockey

By John Mahoney
CORRESPONDENT

When you think of a successful professional hockey franchises, they almost always have one thing in common; a strong farm system.

For a high school hockey team, a town's youth program provides as the team's farm system and when you have a successful high school team it's usually a direct result of a strong youth program.

Now, after three years of petitioning and hard work by parents and organization officials, the Norwell and Scituate high hockey teams will start to feel the affects of stronger farm systems next season as the South Shore Seahawks youth hockey organization will be breaking down into two different programs.

Outside of the players themselves, no one will benefit more from the breakup of the Seahawks' next season than the high school programs at Scituate and Norwell.

Couple that with the recent success of both teams, the futures of both high school teams is as bright as it has ever been.

"I think it is going to work out well because our kids will have more of an opportunity to develop," said Norwell coach Tim Murphy.

It is no mystery that the reason why the Hingham and Hanover high school teams are two of the top public programs on the South Shore is because of their strong youth programs and Scituate High coach Peter Cooney thinks that his team will only get stronger with the breakup.

"I've always thought that kids in Hanover and Hingham have had a leg up because the players are a lot more familiar with each other and there is less of a learning curve when they get to high school. so in that respect I going to look forward to it."

> "I believe that the same kids who are playing together in Mites should be with each other when they're in high school."
> SEAHAWKS PRESIDENT SKIP TUFTS

Seahawks president Skip Tufts agrees, "I believe that the same kids who are playing together in Mites should be with each other when they're in high school."

With over 800 kids the Seahawks program is the largest youth hockey organization in the Northeast.

And with the resurrection of the Norwell High program Tufts said that they just had too many kids.

"This is something that we have been working on and it was something that we had to do," said Tufts. "It's been a long time coming but it's going to work out well," said Tufts. "At the point that we are at right now we would have to start turning kids away."

After getting approval from Mass Hockey and the Yankee and South Shore Conferences, Tufts said the move, that will join Norwell with Scituate and Hull skaters and Marshfield with Cohasset players, has been met with excitement and anticipation.

"There has been very little negative feedback everybody has been really positive. We really want the high school coaches to get involved and I think that this move will help that."

Another big factor that is looming for the Seahawks is the proposal of the potential recreation complex in Scituate that would give the area their own rink for the first time since the Cohasset Winter Gardens closed in the mid-1980's.

"The rink would be the best thing that could happen," Tufts said. "We have five year olds waking up at 4:30 to skate and we have Pee-Wee's getting home as late as 11:30. With the rink, we could eliminate all of that."

Katherine Coyne, Catherine Flaherty, Becky Ross, Kathleen McCarthy and Maureen Equi were particularly effective on offense putting lots of pressure on the Braintree goalie, while Maggie O'Neil moved to defense and worked extremely well with Caitlin Flint, Yasmin Afshar and Katie Grimm.

Stay tuned for play-off results. This team could surprise.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Snow Row is set for March 6

The Snow Row has gained a well-deserved reputation as Hull Lifesaving Museum's signature race. They've had snow squalls and shirt-sleeves, and everything in between on race day, but nothing tempers the excitement of this hard-working winter event or the enthusiasm of the athletes.

Last year's event hosted a record 200 participants and 2,000 spectators lining the beach at Hull Gut. The race starts with all boats on the beach at the museum's Windmill Point Boathouse, in Hull. Then, at the shot of the starting gun, the competitors race into their boats LeMans style, creating a whirlwind of disorganized havoc ashore and afloat.

The 3 3/4-mile triangular course starts through Hull and Hingham Bays, continues around Sheep Island, past the Peddocks Island Day marker, and back to the beach.

The whole event is within view of the boathouse, so this is a particularly good event for spectators. It is also a rare opportunity to see a stunning array of wooden pulling boats on the beach and in action — peapods, dories, wherries, whitehalls, ocean shells, pilot gigs, captain's gigs, and Irish curraghs.

The race has five boat categories, workboats, livery boats, coxed boats, ocean kayaks and ocean shells. A few notes to all race participants: 1) All racers must be members of the USRA or the HLMI Rowing Association. 2) All boats must carry PFD's, bailers and whistles. 3) All coxed boats must begin the race bow on the beach. And 4) The HLMI Race Committee reserves the right to cancel the race or keep individual boats from setting forth due to weather conditions or rower skill level.

After watching the excitement of the Snow Row, the museum, one mile down the beach, will be open with free admission for all.

For more information about the Snow Row, call Ed McCabe at 925-5433 or Box 221, Hull, MA 02045.

Where are you going to display your Sporto?

EXTRA POINTS

DAVID WOLCOTT

You can't turn your television on these days without running into some form or another of an awards show.

Blockbuster has got one.

Soul Train has got one as well.

Even ESPN's got the ESPY's

And now we have the Sportos.

The First Annual Winter Sportos are given to coaches and players across the South Shore who have tickled my fancy in one way or another this season.

The rules are simple- there are none. I'm both the judge and the jury as well as the executioner. Anyone and anything are fair game with the hopes that everyone takes the awards in the fun spirit in which they are intended.

And now onto the lucky winners....

Meeting of the Legends Award- Whenever Duxbury's Foster Cass and Rockland's Bob Fisher get together the games are always great, but I'd almost rather just sit down with them at the local watering hole and talk hoops. These two members of the 300 win club could each fill a book in what they've learned in their years on the bench and in the locker room.

The "Thank You Folks I'll Be Here All Week" Sideline Comedian Award- Silver Lake girls hoop coach Dick Steele. Even during the most intense times he's known to crack a one-liner at a referee, the opposing coach, his own players or even himself. And they're usually pretty humorous.

Best Candidate for Selected Laryngitis Award- You know who you are. There seems to be a rash of players, mostly it seems in girls basketball, who attempt to rattle their opponents on defense by continually screeching at the top of their lungs like Xena on a bad hair day. Please stop it. You're giving me a headache.

Don't Ever Play Cards with this Man Award- Duxbury High hockey coach Peter Saggese, who says more to his players with a single stare from behind the bench than any oration could ever hope to.

Worst Poker Face Award(coaching division)- Abington High girls hoop coach Mike Mayhew. If this man is holding all the aces, you're bound to know it.

Worst Poker Face Award (players division)- The very expressive Rockland High guard Diana Mitchell, who also gets a second award as the winner of the secretary on "NewsRadio" look-alike contest.

Best Meal on the South Shore Award- 2 hot dogs and a coke from the concession stand at Duxbury High. A fine meal at a fair price. And while you're there, don't forget to try the lobster bisque. It's to die for.

Somebody Get that Man a Throat Lozenge Award- WATD-FM Sports Director Bill Wilhelm. It's a given that by the end of the tourney Wilhelm will be suffering from too many games in too many ice hockey arenas over too many consecutive nights, leaving him little, if any, voice. Bank on it.

Toughest Tourney Ticket Award- Any game at Rockland High, which also receives the "Best Home Court Advantage" award given out in ceremonies before tonight's telecast. The gym is small and when it come to tourney time it come be a very uncomfortable place for a visiting team. When at their loudest, the Bulldog faithful can mean as much as five or six points to their team.

Local Members of the Dick Clark School of Aging Award- Cohasset High coaches Torin Sweeney and Ron Ford. It seems like both of them have been on the scene forever, yet some of their players still look older than they do. I want their secret. Immediately.

The Best Fans on the South Shore Award- Anyone that goes out there and roots their lungs out for the kids and proudly wears the colors of the hometown team. But never forgets it's all just a game.

The Worst Fans on the South Shore Award- Anyone that goes out there and roots their lungs out for the kids and proudly wears the color of the hometown team. And can't seem to remember that it's all just a game.

Congratulations to all the winners.

Your Sportos are in the mail.

Fab Five qualify for state finals

including three who fell in the final round.

The top six wrestlers from each weight class at the state finals will move on to the All-New England finals next weekend in Essex Juntion, Vt.

Craig Sheerin lost to Carver's outstanding wrestier Bob Lewis, 7-2, in the 112 pound class while senior Luke Caldwell also lost on points to Weston's Rob Bateman.

In the other final, freshman Chris Pratt was mowing down the competition until an ankle injury 20 seconds into the 119 pound title match with Wayland's Casey Gustas ended his day earlier than he would have wanted.

"It's a shame to lose that way because Chris was wrestling so well and I thought that he had a real fine chance of taking the title, but it wasn't meant to be this year," said Sweeney. "He wanted to go on and finish the match, but the injury was obviously something that needed to be checked out."

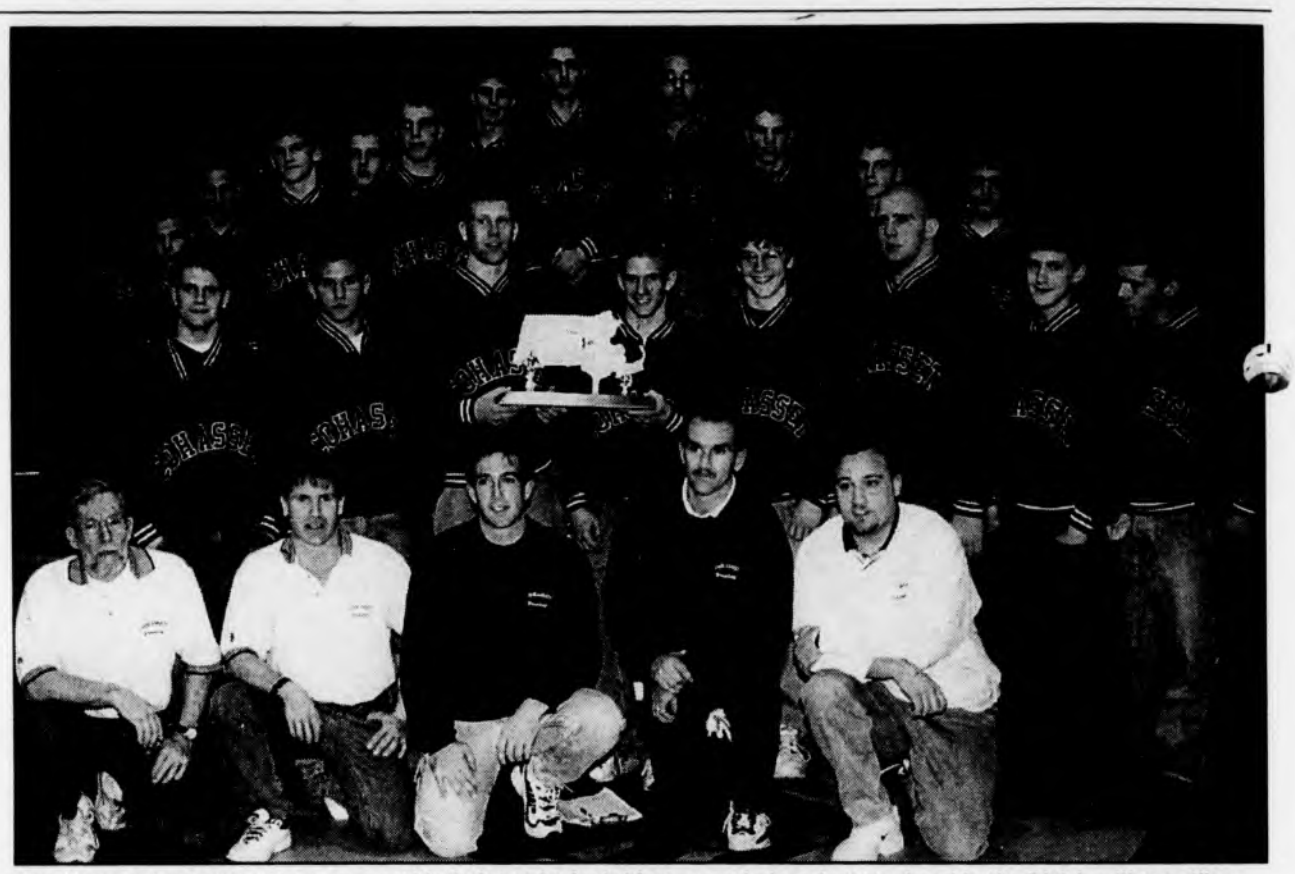
Sweeney said that Pratt would be getting medical attention during the week and it was not apparent as to whether he would be able to compete at the state finals.

Also going to the states is senior Justin Golden in the 160 pound class, who came home with a third place finish while Mike Baird took a fifth place finish and will be an alternate this weekend.

A number of wrestlers didn't qualify for the state finals but still scored important points for the Skippers towards their second place finish including heavyweight J.P. Laugelle, Ben Littauer (145 pounds) and Joe Carbone (215 pounds).

While praising the work of his wrestlers, Sweeney, who was recently chosen as the Division III Coach of the Year, also praised the work of staff of assistant coaches: Deke Conklin and Doug Sheerin as well as former CHS standout grapplers Rick Rourke and Peter Buckley.

"I can't say enough about what they do for the kids and how important their work is to the wrestling program," said Sweeney. "We couldn't have done all of this without them."



The Cohasset wrestling team poses with their trophy for taking second place last weekend in the Division III wrestling tourney. Mike Rossi, Chris Pratt, Craig Sheerin, Justin Golden and Luke Caldwell all qualified to wrestle in the state finals this weekend at Salem High.

A life of giving back to Cohasset

The retired Cohasset postmaster's contributions included: president of the Parent Teacher Association; Grand Knight of the Cohasset Council of the Knights of Columbus; director of Civil Defense; director of veterans' services; president of the hockey boosters club;

Chairman of the Cohasset School Committee; member of the government structure committee; vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society; member of the Cohasset Lightkeepers' Corporation; director of the Central Cemetery and perennial chairman of the nominating committee;

Chairman of the Council on Aging; member of the Friends of the Council on Aging; serving as a lector, eucharistic minister, usher and member of the building committee at St. Anthony's.

A high school track and football athlete, Keating was a regular at the Senior Olympics in the speed walking event until he was sidelined by another stroke two years ago.

A widower, Keating lost his wife, Margaret 10 years ago. The Keatings had six children and 20 grandchildren. One son, Allen, was killed in Vietnam. Larry lives in Hull, Tommy in Duxbury, Brian in Marshfield, Christopher in Milton, and Stephen lives in York, Maine. Their daughter, Joan Bowman lives in Portsmouth, Rhode Island.

Keating's sisters Pauline and Mary Keating live in town; another sister Barbara Keating Rinkovich lives in Hartford.

Although Keating gave his time over six decades to a myriad of committees and organizations, in his later years his attention was focused on being an advocate for local senior citizens.

He was recognized by South Shore Elder Services with the 1993 Edythe B. Donkin Memorial Award and by then Gov. William Weld with the Silver Dove Award for volunteerism to elder affairs.

"As far as being a senior citizen goes," Keating told the Mariner. "Some people look at old age as miserable.

"To me old age is golden. You can take your knowledge, experience and education and offer it to the town and we do," he said.

Joseph D. Buckley of Linden Drive said Keating was like a brother to him.

"He was one of the first ones I met when I came to Cohasset in 1954," said Buckley, who is the town treasurer. "But we became real close about 12 years ago.

"As far as I'm concerned, I have five brothers but he's the brother I never had which is my older brother."

His Cohasset classmate Libby Pompeo, who passed away earlier this year, nominated Keating for the Citizen of the Year Award. Keating and Pompeo went to the Ripley Road School (now the former Osgood School).

Pompeo wrote in her nomination, "Gerard is 'Mr. Cohasset' himself. He is a great guy and has done more for the town of Cohasset than any two people put together and all so willingly."

Police Chief Brian Noonan, an old family friend, sat on the Citizen of the Year selection committee that year.

"Gerard was one of the most supportive people I've ever met," Noonan said this week. "He was always willing to interject himself into anything.

"His time was everyone else's."

Keating didn't look farther than his own backyard to make a difference.

"I'm a long way from home when I cross the town line," he said in his Citizen of the Year interview.

Bryanton, the director of the Council of Elder Affairs, said Keating will be missed.

"I can't imagine we'll be living without him," she said. "He was that much a guiding light.

"You won't come across a Gerard Keating again."

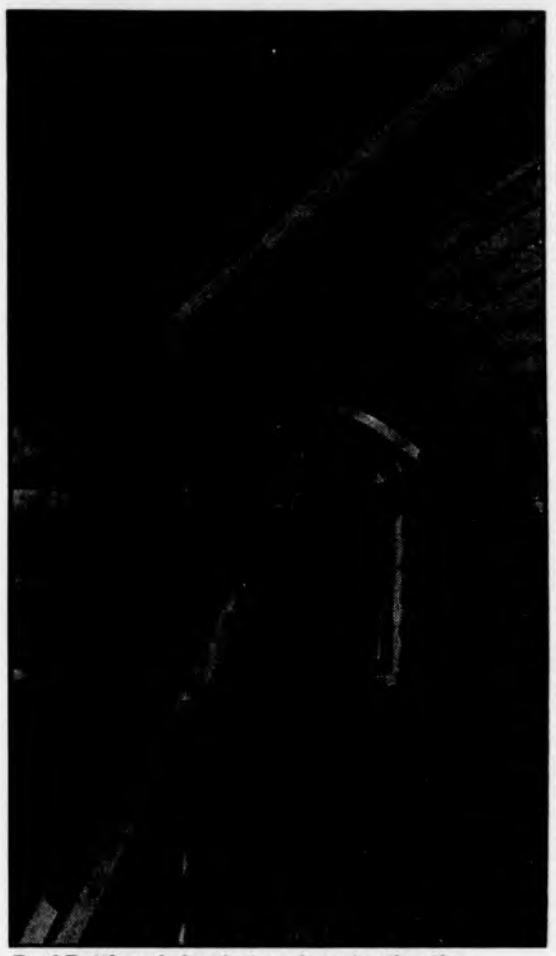
Building protected from elements



Paul Pattison is hard at work protecting the Hagerty House from the elements.

The former Hagerty building is in remarkably good condition considering the eight years it has been unoccupied. There is some rot around the front door, and a small amount of damage from youthful vandals, but Paul Pattison of the Cohasset Lobster Lab says that the basics are still there. The building is going to be renovated as soon as town boards approve the plans and funding becomes available. Already kids from high school are interested in the Lobster Lab Program, and it can be expanded as soon as money becomes available.

For more information, call Kevin Ulmer at 383-2212, Ext. 101, or Steve Bobo at 383-6893.

Innovative on-site waste water management plan proposed

This is a press release from the board of health:

At the forthcoming Town Meeting March 27, Cohasset will have an opportunity to vote on a highly innovative wastewater management plan. Similar in appearance to the plan developed for the town in 1997, the new plan contains many new features which should make it palatable to the voters. The new plan may, at first blush, appear to resemble the previous plan, because much of its boiler plate (the legal provisions in it) uses the same words as in the 1997 version. After all, the old version was prepared by SEA, Inc. under a contract to review the town's records and propose a townwide plan which would meet the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) requirements. Many who saw the plan, which called for mandatory inspections of every on-site wastewater system in town, thought the plan too restrictive and arbitrary. But the new plan is a far cry from the old.

• In the first place, it's voluntary. No one need sign up for the plan unless he wishes to. No one will inspect anyone's septic system unless he wishes it or it is a clear public health threat to a neighbor or the environment. This means that if someone has a privy, and it doesn't bother anyone, he can continue to use it. There is no provision for inspections of every system in town, and there is even a provision, under certain circumstances, to eliminate inspections at transfer of title.

• The plan will not cost the taxpayer anything. The town will charge those who have signed up for the plan a fee for maintenance and operation of their septic system, similar to the fee charged for wastewater processing by the sewer commission. The homeowner will pay for betterments over 20 years. Low interest loans are available from the town using state funds. Cohasset will be eligible for these funds if the article on next month's warrant is passed. (Town counsel and the bonding counsel have reviewed and approved the wording of the warrant article.) Homeowners would repay loans as a betterment over 20 years. These loans will be available to all homeowners who have signed up for the plan as long as funds are available. The plan will be administered by a head of "Wastewater Processing Services," a position which can be filled by existing staff already working at the board of health supplemented by a contractor which will be responsible to the town, and paid for by wastewater processing fees. This position has the duties of maintaining town septic records, including pumping records and data for every wastewater system in town on existing maps at the board of health and numerous others which will also be covered by fees once the plan is initiated. There will be startup costs based on the number of people who sign up for the plan, which will be covered by the fees assessed.

• The plan contains a provision for credits (Septicredits) to anyone who permits perkable land which he owns to be used by others to process wastewater. This Septicredit provision is designed to encourage the use of perkable land for joint wastewater processing by a group of homes. For example, rather than expanding the central treatment plant, a group of homeowners near a plot of pervious ground owned by someone nearby could build a system for wastewater processing. The town would issue a credit in the form of an abatement to the owner for his wastewater processing fee. The amount of the credit would be based on the capacity of the system built on the property owner's land.

The new wastewater management plan, far from being like the old one, will function as a utility, where the rate payer has his system operated and maintained by a contractor responsible to the town. He would pay the town a fee based on the total costs to the town, prorated by the number of homes which have signed up.

This plan has attracted much attention from the state which has asked Joe Godzik, the health officer, to give a paper on it at a forthcoming health forum. Numerous Cohasset residents have been requested to review it. Anyone wishing to comment on the plan will have the opportunity at public forums which are planned for early March.

Community forum on risk behaviors of Cohasset teens

"Drug Proofing Cohasset," a forum for everyone in the community, will answer questions and present strategies for dealing with the findings of the recently released Cohasset Youth Risk Behavior Survey. The event will feature Dick Armour, a substance abuse and prevention specialist, and will be held at Cohasset High School March 2, 7 p.m. at the high school cafeteria. This is part of the ongoing substance abuse prevention strategy supported by a consortium of town and school organizations. Mr. Armour, the key note speaker, will share information on the 12 steps to drug proofing your children, forging communities resilient to drugs, and building consensus for community action.

The event will feature Dick Armour, a substance abuse and prevention specialist, and will be held at Cohasset High School March 2, 7 p.m. at the high school cafeteria

The Youth Risk Behavior Survey, conducted last year, is a bi-annual national survey designed to monitor the risk behavior among youth in grades 7-12 in Cohasset, as well as among youth from across the United States. Local survey results are compared against both state and national statistics. The survey, constructed by the Centers for Disease Control, measures risk behaviors associated with drug, alcohol and tobacco use, sexual behaviors, suicide and eating disorders, among others. Health Education Coordinator, Dr. Michael Gill, said, that the survey is administered in such a way to maximize the validity of the results.

Following is a summary of key findings:

One-third of seventh- and eighth-graders consumed five or more drinks in a row during the month preceding the survey. Sixty-five percent of Cohasset High School students reported having an alcoholic drink during this period, compared to 51 percent nationally.

During the month preceding the survey, 30 percent of Cohasset High School students reported riding in a car with a driver who had been drinking alcohol, compared to 37 percent nationally.

About 30 percent of Cohasset High School students reported using marijuana in the month prior to the survey. The Cohasset data are consistent with national surveys that demonstrate a sharp increase in lifetime marijuana use from 34 percent in 1993 to 55 percent in 1998.

Thirty-nine percent of Cohasset High School students reported using marijuana by age 15. Overall, the incidence of alcohol and marijuana use among Cohasset High School students rises dramatically between the ages of 13 and 15.

Ten percent of Cohasset High School students reported that they had seriously considered suicide, compared to 21 percent nationally (1997). Twenty-five percent of Cohasset Middle School students reported that they had thought seriously about suicide in their lifetime.

Gill stated that "high risk behavior such as drug and alcohol abuse is not just a problem among youth. It is clearly a societal problem that will require a cooperative effort from the entire community if we are to make any headway. Speaking of the March 2 forum, Gill said he "hopes to see all concerned citizens in attendance including those parents who have children who do not abuse drugs or alcohol, because we all have a lot at stake."

Scituate woman faces multiple charges

Lynn Tedeschi, 27, of Scituate faces multiple charges from Cohasset police following an incident in the early hours of the morning on Feb. 15.

After making a traffic stop at Rt. 3A and Pond St. at about 1 a.m., Police Officer William Quigley had to jump out of the way when the white van allegedly driven by Tedeschi swerved toward him, missing the cruiser and the stopped vehicle by inches.

According to police, Quigley, who observed the van traveling at a high rate of speed, went after the vehicle and stopped Tedeschi on Rt. 3A near the Scituate line. After being taken into custody, Tedeschi allegedly became unruly and kicked the windows of the cruiser.

Tedeschi became agitated at officers at the police station, allegedly kicking Quigley and spitting at him and Sgt. David Pomarico. Quigley sustained minor injuries. Cohasset EMTs treated Pomarico for an arm laceration. Both officers stayed on duty.

Police charged Tedeschi with operating under the influence of liquor, second offense; operating a MV negligently so as to endanger, speeding, failure to stay in marked lanes, and having no registration in her possession. She was also charged with assault & battery with a dangerous weapon, A&B on a police officer (two counts); resisting arrest; threatening to commit a crime; and refusing to give her name to a police officer.

Tedeschi was arraigned on the charges Feb. 16. The case was continued to a pre-trial conference.

Tedeschi declined to comment on advice of counsel.

CHS senior charged with OUI

Police arrested a Cohasset High senior and charged him with operating under the influence of liquor, speeding, operating negligently as to endanger and failure to stay within marked lanes, after following the green Ford Explorer he was driving for several miles, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

Det. Gregory Lennon stopped James V. O'Sullivan, 18, of 51 Forest Ave., after he turned left into the parking lot at Mary Lou's News off Rt. 3A at about 12:45 a.m., Feb. 16.

O'Sullivan was arrested after failing several field sobriety tests, Noonan said. He said O'Sullivan's blood alcohol level was better than twice the legal limit.

Police said O'Sullivan was traveling in excess of 75 mph along Rt. 3A.

O'Sullivan was arraigned on the charges in Quincy District Court Feb. 16.

O'Sullivan's attorney Michael Coyne of Cohasset could not be reached for comment.

IT'S HAPPENING

'Golden Age of Yachting'

The Cohasset Sailing Club and the Cohasset Yacht Club present Halsey C. Herreshoff of the Herreshoff Marine Museum "Golden Age of Yachting" on Saturday, March 13 at 8 p.m. at the Walton Rogers Hall, St. Stephen's Church, Cohasset.

Reserved tickets are $8 for adults, $4 for students 18 and under. (Unreserved tickets at the door are $10 adults; $5 students).

A slide-illustrated talk explaining the design and construction of great yachts designed by Capt. Nathanael G. Herreshoff and built at the Herreshoff Manufacturing Company of Bristol , R.I., which is currently the site of the Herreshoff Maritime Museum. The presentation will include the Atlantic Challenge, the transatlantic yacht race of 1997 and prospects for the America's Cup Races scheduled for February 2000 in Auckland, New Zealand.

Proceeds from the lecture benefit the Marine Studies Rowing program at Cohasset High.

Reservations can be made by calling 749-7580 and referring to the "Golde Age of Yachting" lecture. Checks should be made out to Cohasset Yacht Club and mailed to Davenport B. Crocker, Inc., 94 Station St., Hingham, 02043.

Support post-prom party

For the second year, a group of parents of senior students at Cohasset High School are planning a Post-Prom All Night Party. The first after Prom All Night Party last year was a huge success, and due to the generosity of many of Cohasset's businesses, they were able to keep the students safe. Supported by local police and organizations, this all night affair gives the students the chance to enjoy a safe and fun experience. The second Post-Prom All Night Party will be held at Cohasset High School after Prom Friday, June 4.

They would be so grateful if your business would make a donation to help make this evening a success again this year.

If you can help out, please make your company's check out to "Cohasset Post-Prom Party" and mail to: Cohasset Post-Prom Party Committee, 51 Forest Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025.

Community working together

The children of SandCastles Child Care Center thank Cohasset Police Department for their help.

Each Wednesday afternoon, 10 three- and four-year old children and teachers, cross 3A to visit Sun Rise Assisted Living. The trip is possible because a Police Cruiser stops the traffic on 3A allowing the children to cross the street. The children are always excited by the flashing lights and the friendly police officers. The actual journey across 3A has become a big treat.

Without the help of the local police department, the trips would not take place.

From all of the Pre-Schoolers at SandCastles, thank you Cohasset Police Department. We are very grateful for your help.

Water rate relief is just around the corner

On their next bills, Mass.-American Water Company customers in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset will see a rate reduction thanks to a state grant.

The $2.5 million earmarked for Mass.-American users is part of just over $9M released last week from the Mass. Water Pollution Abatement Trust.

Consumers in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset will see a "surcharge credit" on their water bills commencing March 1. A typical residential customer will receive a surcharge credit totaling $194.16 the first year of the program due to MAWC's receiving two installments from the trust.

Starting in 2000, residential credits will total $97.08 per year. Water bills for MAWC customers in the three towns increased by an average of 155 percent when the federally-mandated Safe Drinking Water Act forced MAWC to construct a new filtration plant in Hingham.

"I've probably put more effort into this than any other issue I've had to work on up here. The file I have on this issue is four feet thick."

— State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund

The total financial assistance committed is $12.5M or 50 percent of the eligible cost of the project that will be paid to MAWC in 10 annual installments.

The appropriated funds are the result of legislation enabling the MAWC's filtration plant project to qualify for financial assistance through the Drinking Water State Revolving Fund Program.

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said it was a 2-1/2 year legislative battle to get the MAWC project to qualify for the money.

"I've probably put more effort into this than any other issue I've had to work on up here," Hedlund said. "The file I have on this issue is four feet thick."

Hedlund praised Mass. American for working to help make the financial assistance a reality.

"They did go after the money aggressively from a paperwork standpoint," he said.

When Pres. Clinton signed legislation which allowed states to create zero-interest drinking water revolving funds to help lower the cost of borrowing money for construction projects to improve water quality, the law did not grandfather in completed projects.

Hedlund co-sponsored a bill to create a safe drinking water revolving fund based on the federal model and recommended additional language to include completed projects like Mass.-American's to be eligible for assistance.

Hedlund worked over the next two years shepherding the issue through the legislature.

"It was the culmination of a lot of hard work within the legislative process to get us to this point where rate payers will see a benefit in their next bill," he said.

In a letter to customers, Mass-American Vice President and Manager Keith Bossung said, the company" is proud to have been part of the cooperative effort between town officials and stage legislators, as well as state regulatory departments in establishing the legislation and the authorizations necessary to realize this significant rate reduction for our customers."

At the $2.5M check passing ceremony at Mass.-American last week are (from L-R): Philip Lemnios, Hull town manager; Katharine Reardon, Hingham selectmen chairman; Eric Berman, Mass. Water Pollution Abatement Trust; Andrew Gottlieb, DEP; Keith W. Bossung, VP and manager, MAWC; Sen. Robert Hedlund; Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray; William Rennie of Rep. Paul Haley's office; and James Connelly, commissioner, division of Telecommunications and Energy.

Volunteer at Trustees of Reservations

There will be an open house on Sunday, March 7 from 2:30-4:30 p.m. for individuals interested in volunteer opportunities with the Trustees of Reservations. The Trustees is a member-supported, nonprofit conservation organization that preserves, for public use and enjoyment, properties of exceptional scenic, historic, and ecological value in Massachusetts. Founded in 1891, volunteers have always been critical to the success of the Trustees. Due to limited staff, the meaningful and productive involvement of volunteers can make important and unique contributions. Opportunities exist in the area of membership, fundraising and land protection, community relations, and interpretive programs such as leading nature walks and giving tours.

The Trustees of Reservations owns and cares for 80 reservations across the state totaling more than 21,000 acres including World's End in Hingham, Whitney & Taylor Woods in Cohasset, Norris Reservation in Norwell, and Two Mile Reservation in Marshfield. The open house will be held at a private home in Cohasset. Due to parking limitations, the Trustees requests that you call the Southeast Regional Office in Canton at 781-821-2977 for more information and directions.

Land-mine survivor takes message to White House

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Jerry White marched on the White House Monday afternoon.

The former Cohasset resident is at the forefront of the cause to ban anti-personnel land mines around the world.

While Landmine Survivors Network, the organization he co-founded, could celebrate the fact the international land-mine treaty took effect March 1, it still laments that the United States is not one of the countries joining the ban.

Thus, the march on the White House where White along with about a dozen other land-mine survivors and hundreds of interested citizens hoped to their message would sound in the Oval Office. White, who was a college student at Brown University at the time, lost part of his right leg after stepping on a land mine while on a hiking trip in Israel in 1984.

The march culminated a nine-month, intensive campaign to get the US to sign the treaty by the year 2000.

White, who was reached by telephone at his office in Washington DC, said the march culminated a nine-month, intensive campaign to get the US to sign the treaty by the year 2000.

The simple question is "Why not us?" says White about the 134 other countries that have signed and of those, the 66 that have ratified the treaty, according to published reports.

"It's a shame the United States is not on board with the other counties recognizing the urgency to sign the treaty," said White, who grew up in Cohasset. His mother, Mimi White, lives on Sheldon Road.

Two other Cohasseters, Lincoln Bloomfield Jr., whose parents live on Beach Street and Ross Sherbrooke of Jerusalem Road, are also involved with Landmine Survivors Network (LSN).

White said a new era is dawning and even military officials like Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf say anti-personnel mines are not essential.

Judge sides with town in sewer suit

Commissioners consider options

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The sewer commission has lost a battle but the war may not be over just yet. The members of the sewer commission — Ted Guild, Gary Vanderweil and Henry Rattenbury — sued the town last year over a dispute about contract awarding authority. But Norfolk Superior Court Justice Thomas E. Connolly rejected the sewer commissioners' claims last week, finding that the town manager had the sole authority to award and cancel contracts. Guild said the decision was unfortunate, but the sewer commissioners would re-group and consider their options.

"I'm stunned by the decision, and we believe the judge missed the real issue," Guild said. "However, we're not just going to roll over and play dead. We have many options and we are evaluating each one. This whole thing hinges on the judge's interpretation of Chapter 30B. Chapter 30B applies to supplies and services. Clearly, it does not apply to construction contracts."

"We're being asked to take responsibility without being given the authority to carry out our duties. It impairs our ability to function effectively."
— Sewer commission chairman Ted Guild

The Cohasset Town Manager Act uses Chapter 30B of the General Laws Uniform Procurement Act to define the contract awarding authority of the town manager. Judge Connolly cited the following relevant passage from Chapter 30B in his decision:

Cohasset forum on SPED draws a crowd

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

An open forum sponsored by the Cohasset Parents Advisory Council (PAC) on issues relating to proposed changes to special education funding brought keynote speakers, state Sen. Steven Tolman and attorney Tim Sindelar, to the Cohasset Middle-High school's auditorium, along with an audience of 50 parents, selectmen and nearby town officials.

The forum was pulled together by PAC co-chairs Maureen Jerz and Kim Maynard with the help of Fred Johanson, a parent advocate for special needs children. State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, was on hand, as were a number of Cohasset selectmen, school officials from Cohasset, Scituate, Norwell and Hingham, and parents from area towns.

"We feel that part of PAC's job is to get this kind of information out to the public, particularly to town officials who are in a position to advocate for budgets," said Jerz. "They need to know what bills are out there and what they're advocating for when they go to legislators. With this forum, we've expanded the job of

Building houses for our feathered friends

Dana Cushing has built more than a dozen birdhouses for his Beechwood Street yard in his spare time.

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

There are dozens of new condos for the taking on Beechwood Street. But they aren't the kind that you'll find listed with a local Realtor.

These are reserved only for those Cohasseters of the feathered variety.

Dana Cushing, a house painter by trade, isn't an ornithologist or even an avid bird watcher for that matter. Admitting he's learning as he goes along, Cushing doesn't elaborate on all the species of birds including house wrens, tree swallows, black-capped chickadees, titmice and nuthatches that may take up residence in his birdhouses, some of which have up to 22 apartments.

But he does love working with his hands and making good use of his two-acre property at 271 Beechwood St.

In the winter when the house painting business slows down, Cushing stays busy turning his yard into a virtual wonderland that includes walkways, stonewalls, a renovated barn, and a tree house complete with a tower and about 14 birdhouses. And birds aren't the only animals about. Cushing also has pet rabbits, egg-laying chickens and a couple of goats.

Cushing moved with his family from Cambridge to Cohasset in 1992 although he originally hails from Norwell and Hingham.

"Moving to Cohasset was like moving back to the country, our yard was like a thicket there were tons of birds, so building the houses has been kind of fun," he said.

Cushing built his first birdhouse four years ago and then just kept on going, completing five more for this spring. His birdhouses provide homes for about 150 birds. He even turned some old dovecotes in the antique coal shed on his property into birdhouses, some of which he sees through the kitchen window.

"It's a very interactive kind of thing," Cushing said. "It's fun to build something and watch the birds poke in and out."

Ellyn Einhorn, education coordinator at Mass. Audubon in Marshfield, said building birdhouses is a good conservation effort.

"They provide good nesting spots," Einhorn explained. "Especially as forest areas are being broken up as they are and with people taking down decaying trees."

Einhorn said birdhouses provide habitat for "cavity nesters" such as nuthatches, sparrows and bluebirds.

She said birds and their offspring often come back to the same area year after year.

"This is a good time to clean birdhouses out," Einhorn said. "Birds prefer a clean house."

"It's a very interactive kind of thing. It's fun to build something and watch the birds poke in and out."

— Dana Cushing,
271 Beechwood St.

But she warned that birdhouse owners shouldn't be surprised if another creature has taken up residence for the winter. Sometimes red squirrels and even mice move during the winter months.

A believer in recycling, Cushing built three birdhouses last year out of wood from a 75-year-old shed his neighbor razed.

"My wife and I are friendly with nature. She loves to garden: we're trying to take what we have and make it a nature friendly place," he said.

Self-taught about birds, Cushing learned how high the hole of the birdhouse should be above the floor. It varies from bird to bird, he explains.

"Nuthatches like the hole up about 4-1/2 inches, bluebirds like it seven or eight inches and the northern flicker likes it nine to 18 inches above the floor," he said. Cushing said the distance of the floor from the hole protects the baby birds and even the eggs from predators like starlings that can stick their heads through and pluck the eggs.

He's even determined how big the boxes should be for the different birds. The nuthatch likes at 4-in. by 4-in. compartment, for example.

Osborne Ingram, who lives across the street, has enjoyed seeing the numerous birdhouses go up.

"I hope the word gets around in bird land that there's some very elegant housing available in Beechwood thanks to Dana," said Ingram. "We certainly would welcome some new feathered neighbors."

Birdhouses provide needed nesting sites

The availability of suitable nesting sites is a vital requirement of all birds. By placing birdhouses in backyards, people can help provide these much needed nesting sites and attract a greater variety of birds to our yards. Putting up nesting structures is easy, and many common birds that visit backyards will utilize artificial boxes and shelves. However, some knowledge of the nesting requirements of birds is necessary in order to maximize your (and the birds') success with birdhouses.

It is helpful to first outline some of the different types of nesting birds and their needs. Two of the principal groups of nesting birds are cavity nesters and open nesters. Cavity nesters require cavities, usually in wood, in which to build nests and lay eggs. Bluebirds, chickadees, and woodpeckers fall into this category. In contrast, open nesters place their nests among the branches of trees or shrubs, utilizing a sturdy crotch or small branches to support the nest. Robins, jays, and cardinals are among those that build open nests. Almost all birds build nests strictly for the purpose of raising young. Once the young have fledged, the nest is no longer used by the young or adults. It is thought that birds avoid re-using old nests in order to escape nest parasites, which infest the young birds, and to outsmart nest predators that may have learned the location of the used nest.

Open nesting birds can be attracted to a backyard by planting a variety of native trees, shrubs, and vines. Ask for Massachusetts Audubon's "Landscaping for Birds" information sheet for details on how to develop a landscaping plan for backyard birds. Cavity nesters can be attracted to a backyard by leaving dead limbs and trees (snags) in place, and by providing artificial housing. Providing artificial nesting structures for backyard birds is the primary focus of this information sheet.

The Cavity Shortage

Woodpeckers regularly excavate their own cavities for nesting. They are primary cavity nesters. Most woodpeckers seek out dead or dying wood for excavation, although a few of the larger species, such as sapsuckers and the Hairy Woodpecker, can drill into live wood. Many other cavity nesters, including bluebirds, wrens and nuthatches, usually have to use abandoned woodpecker holes because they do not have the strong bills necessary for drilling. They are secondary cavity nesters. In many backyards and managed woodlots, dead limbs and trees are removed, creating a hardship for those species that need them. Even in unmanaged areas, cavities are a limited resource, and this often creates a great deal of competition for them. This is one reason why cavity nesters respond so readily to artificial nest boxes. Cavities are also used by birds for night roosting, and they can provide valuable shelter during extremely cold winter nights.

CHL loses another key court battle

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The owners of the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill closed voluntarily last July. If things were different and they had stayed open, they would have been closed down anyway as of Feb. 18, 1999. On Feb. 18, the Chief Justice of the Land Court, Peter W. Kilborn, ruled that the town acted properly when it ordered CHL to shut down for failure to file a special permit with the Registry of Deeds.

John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of the anti-landfill groups Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), uncovered the permit violation during an inspection of CHL documents. He praised the decision.

"I am pleased that the land court has affirmed the ZBA decision, made by myself and other Cohasset residents that CHL did not have a special permit and was operating illegally from day one," McNabb said. "The decision puts the final nail in the coffin for any further expansions by CHL."

This latest loss in court comes on top of other court cases against Cohasset that CHL has lost, including last year's rejection of the landfill owner's proposed Area V expansion and alleged civil rights violations by the town.

McNabb discovered the permit violation in November, 1997 while researching CHL's paperwork for SAFE. In January, 1998, Building Inspector Robert Egan ordered the landfill to shut down for failing to file a special permit with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. Former landfill owner James Tyeryar obtained the special permit in 1976, but failed to file the document at the Registry of Deeds as required by state law. Tyeryar's failure to file the permit meant the landfill was not operating legally. John and Paul Barry bought the landfill in 1982, but did not file the special permit either.

CHL filed the permit on Jan. 21, 1998. However, the town's Water Resource District, created in 1986, ran right through the middle of the landfill. Because CHL had never filed the special permit, the Barry's could no longer claim it was a legal, pre-existing use grandfathered into the district.

Last Feb., CHL appeal Egan's shutdown order. At a ZBA hearing, CHL attorney Anton Moehrke argued that the town had enforced the special permit in a legal action years earlier, effectively admitting that the document was in force.

Justice Kilborn rejected CHL's arguments. He agreed with the town that the permit was invalid and ordered CHL to discontinue any landfilling operations.

In the same ruling, Justice Kilborn did support a claim by CHL that the town could not order it to remove illegal waste from Area IV-B until the Department of Environmental Protection and the board of health approve a removal plan. The zoning board's order to remove the waste immediately was annulled by Justice Kilborn. He took the overall matter under advisement until DEP and the board of health approve a removal plan.

The CHL sub-committee is still meeting behind closed doors negotiating post-closure plans and remedies for environmental damage from the landfill. Site assignment hearings have been delayed until April so the sub-committee can continue its work.

Cohasset man pleads guilty to embezzlement from charities

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset attorney and accountant John P. Conroy, 379 Atlantic Ave., plead guilty Tuesday in Suffolk Superior Court to charges of embezzlement by a trustee and three counts of filing a false tax return. He was sentenced to two years in the House of Correction and is under an order from the Suffolk Country Probate Court to pay full restitution to the two charities he defrauded. He will also be responsible for the payment of back taxes along with interest and civil penalties.

Conroy's attorney, Joseph Brodigan of the Boston law firm Langan, Dempsey and Brodigan, said that the year-and-a-half-long case is tragic.

"Jack Conroy, other than this particular circumstance, is a man with an amazing and outstanding background," he said. "It's a shame for him, for his family, and for the charities involved. He was a vibrant member of the Cohasset community and contributed very much to the community, which makes this especially sad and tragic. I hope people will remember the good things about him."

Conroy was sentenced while his wife, three sons and brother, who is a priest, looked on.

It was the end to a financial deception that began between 1993 and 1994 when Conroy, 61, paid the charities only $400,000 from the nearly $1.4 million estate of John Burke of West Roxbury.

Conroy had been named executor to the estate when Burke died in 1993. Burke's will left his house to the Archdiocese of Boston and directed that the rest of his estate be split between the American Cancer Society and the Children's Hospital in Boston.

Instead, Conroy paid himself $860,000 in executor's fees and kept the two charities from suspecting that anything was wrong by not disclosing to them the total value of the estate; how much he was receiving in fees; and by not filing an inventory of the estate with probate court.

"He was quickly plundering the estate," said special assistant attorney general Andrew Zaikis, who has been on the case since 1995. "He started within seven days of Burke's death, when he wrote himself $225,000 in checks. Within the first month, that grew to $300,000. By the end of 1993, he had taken $843,000 and that was only halfway through the year. He took what was left and had there been more, he probably would have taken it."

"He was a vibrant member of the Cohasset community and contributed very much to the community, which makes this especially sad and tragic. I hope people will remember the good things about him."

— Joseph Brodigan, Conroy's attorney

In 1991, Conroy left a major accounting firm where he served as a senior partner to start his own accounting practice in downtown Boston.

During the next three years, he made more than $1.8 million from his business, his severance payments from the accounting firm and from the Conroy estate fees. He reduced his income tax liability to the state by filing false income tax returns for those three years. He also fraudulently increased his losses from his partnership investments by more than $1.5 million and did not report the entirety of his income from the Burke estate, the attorney general's office said.

Conroy's deception was uncovered by the Estate Tax Division of the Massachusetts Department of Revenue (DOR) when he filed a tax return a year after Mr. Burke died which indicated a $625,000 charge to the estate.

"That number turned out to be $244,000 less than what he actually took," said Zaikis. "But even at $625,000, the people at DOR were falling off their chairs when they saw this return for a $1.4 million estate."

Zaikis said that the benchmark for a reasonable fee for this size estate is about 4 to 7 percent. "Let's say we take five percent of that — that comes out to $62,000. Normally, the DOR looks for an executor's fee around that range, but he charged $625,000, over $100,000 more. The DOR was good enough to spot it and hand it over to the criminal division within their agency, who then went to work with the attorney general's office."

Brodigan, Conroy's attorney, said that the case has been going on for a long time and he's sure everyone is glad it's over.

"John was involved in Seahawks Youth Hockey, has been a member of the council for the elderly in Cohasset and other community services," he said. "He has more dimensions than this."

And that's what makes white-collar crime so difficult for people to fathom, explained Zaikis.

"People who hold up people with the point of a pen are far more insidious and harder to detect," he said. "They have suits and ties, live next door to you and they are the people who you would last expect to be doing this sort of stuff. People have terrible perceptions of who to be afraid of and they fear minorities they're not familiar with, but they're more likely to be bilked by a cold phone call, a stockbroker or their own attorney."

The same day that Conroy plead guilty, a former chief of the radiology department at Children's Hospital was charged with embezzling more than $70,000 from the hospital's Radiology Foundation and a Marshfield woman was indicted for stealing more than $3.3 million from an insurance company to spend on her prize-winning show horses, according to published reports.

"If I had to suggest advice, I'd say to appoint your friend, close associate or brother as executor along with the law firm and bank that has your money," said Zaikis. "That way, there is far less likelihood that the person you chose is going to be tempted during a hard stretch of time. If there is no one looking over your executor's shoulder, it's a situation that's ripe for abuse. In Conroy's case, there is no explanation other than atypical behavior in an otherwise exemplary citizen."

Selectman, health board races should be interesting

On the election trail

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Election '99

One political veteran and two relative newcomers — politically speaking, that is — have joined the race for the April 10 town election.

"Veteran" Frederick Koed, 92 Pleasant St., has announced that he will run for one of the board of selectmen seats currently occupied by incumbents Nan Roth and chairman Ronnie McMorris.

The former water commissioner and advisory board member has launched a high-profile campaign, with a press release and web page. "I have an e-mail," quipped Roth, about the media-savvy politicking of Koed.

Roth has also served on the advisory committee and McMorris formerly served on the conservation commission. Both have said that that they are ready for the election challenge.

Two "newcomers" are vying for a shot at board of health chairman Kevin Ulmer's open seat. Ulmer is not seeking a second term and Charles H. Sturdy, 270 Jerusalem Road, and Dr. Robin Lawrence, 15 Beach St., will be competing for his place.

Both men came forward just before last week's deadline to obtain nomination papers.

Sturdy is a fourth year associate at the Boston law firm of Goodwin, Procter & Hoar LLP (Limited Liability Partnerships) where he practices corporate law.

"I was looking for some way to participate in the local town government and this looked like a good place to start, especially since I thought it was uncontested," said Sturdy, about his last-minute choice to run for Ulmer's seat.

Sturdy received his BA in economics from Haverford College, Haverford, Penn. and his JD at Boston University School of Law.

Although Sturdy has not served on a town board, his father has.

"Watching what my father does, I have seen the amount of times that there is a lack of information in the community and things go down the wrong path unless information can get out there to sway the outcome," he said. "I think it would be helpful for the community to have someone learn what's happening and then turn around and put it in plain English so that people understand the trade-offs and choices involved in issues."

Sturdy, 28, is also a fan of town meetings in general.

"I think that I'm one of the few young people that actually find this interesting, gathering by the people who show up at town meetings," he said.

Sturdy has lived in Cohasset since the age of three, attended public school here and was chosen valedictorian for his graduating class of 1988.

"I don't remember fully what I said but it was something about never putting one's career above one's happiness," he said. "Mostly, I was focusing on keeping it short."

Sturdy's competition, Lawrence, has years of experience behind him, having retired from the U.S. Public Health Service where he worked since 1973.

"I retired from the U.S. Health Service and now have a consulting business in health care in which I provide consultation services in public health, primary care and oral health to the public, private and not-for-profit sectors," said Lawrence. "In that capacity, I'm currently working with two states in their public health system. I've also worked at the national and state levels and I thought it was time to bring my expertise to the town where I have lived since 1973."

He holds a DDS from the Columbia University School of Dental and Oral Surgery (he holds a masters in public health, but is a dentist by training); an AB from Columbia College and an MA from the University of Michigan, School of Public Health, Ann Arbor, Michigan. He served as a dental officer in the U.S. Navy, after graduating from dental school in 1965 and earned his clinical experience on board a missile cruiser.

Lawrence said that the major issue in Cohasset today is waste disposal issues; specifically issues on site disposal and a more centralized program of sewering.

"That seems to take up much of the energy of the health people in town," he said. "I have no foregone or preconceived notions on the issues, but I think that I have the education, background and intelligence to listen carefully, learn and make a right decision for the community."

Lawrence describes himself as a "not political person" but said that when he saw that Ulmer had left a vacancy, he could think of no better person than himself to fill the position.

"I'm going to run based upon my skills, expertise and reputation and will try to inform the electorate of my background, skills and interest in protecting the health and welfare of the community," he said. "I won't target any particular part of the community. The whole community is my target."

The school committee can expect two new unopposed members; Stephanie Noble, 10 Joy Place, and Mary "Betsy" Connolly, 431A King St.

Noble let a full-time job at DM Management in Hingham at the end of December and intended to get involved in some way in the community. When friends discussed the possibility of her running for the school committee, she came forward for the seat vacated by school committee chairman, who will not run for reelection.

"I have two children in the public school system, am pleased with it, and want to be part of maintaining that excellence," she said. "I'm on a very, very steep learning curve, but what I've encountered so far are parents, teachers and administrators who are very willing and open to talk with me about what's happening in the school system. I'm spending my time now trying to get up to speed on the issues."

Noble said that her strong business background combined with her insight on budget issues gained in the entrepreneurial business at DM Management will be useful in her work with the school committee.

"I'm also a firm believer in the idea of excellent public schools and I think we have the foundation of excellence here in Cohasset," she said. "It's just very important to me to try to contribute as much as I can to the ongoing excellence."

Nancy Hertig of 124 Lamberts Lane did not turn her nomination papers in for last week's deadline and so Connolly will also have no opposition for her place on the school committee, filling the vacancy created when Joseph McElroy stepped down with one year left on his term.

"I have worked on several campaigns here in town to support candidates that I believed were bringing us forward in education, such as Ralph Kidder, Rick Shea, Maureen Jerz, Kathy Ofsthun and Sue Turgiss," she said.

But Connolly is not a novice to education. She has served 25 years in the field, starting as a teacher and then administrator in Hingham's Foster School.

"I've been very involved with Ed Reform from a professional point of view and I was also on the school council in Cohasset for the middle and high school of four years, to of which I was co-chair," she said.

Connolly also served on the school committee policy review task force with McElroy last year. She was a PSO representative for the Parent Advisory Council (PAC). Presently, she is a parent representative to the PSO for the METCO program in Cohasset.

Other community activities included five years on the Cohasset Teen Center board, three years on the Community Center board, and 10 years as a teacher at St. Anthony's Church in Hingham. She also volunteered her stamina to the Appalachia Service Project for two summers under the leadership of the Rev. Gary Pitts at Second Congregational Church.

The prompter for Connolly to join the school committee began during a board of selectmen meeting several weeks ago.

"I was very concerned when selectmen were discussing letting class sizes go up," she said. "We can't think about how things were in the '50s, when many of us went to school. When I heard that placing 28 to 32 students per classroom was a possible solution to the budget, I realized that we were heading backward and not forward in our approach to the 21st century. A duplication of a 1950s classroom is not what I have in mind for a 21st century classroom."

Anthony J. Carbone, 72 Church St., has no competition for the seat on the recreation commission held by Shelanne S. Durkin who is not seeking reelection.

Former advisory board chairman Roger Whitley, 11 Cedar Lane, joins incumbents Sheila Evans and Roger Lowe seeking election to the three seats on the board of library trustees.

Raymond Kasperowicz, 172 S. Main St., is running unopposed for Ted Guild's seat on the sewer commission. And William Goode, 269 Atlantic Ave., is unchallenged in his bid for a third term on the planning board.

William Smith, 110 Nichols Road, is seeking a seat on the board of assessors. James Lagrotteria is not seeking reelection.

Newcomer Ann Barrett, 60 Elm St., will run for the housing authority seat held by Betty Grassie who is stepping down.

The following are unopposed in their bids for reelection: Town Moderator George Marlette, Town Clerk Marion Douglas and water commissioner Richard Muncey.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Koed announces candidacy for selectman

Fred Koed, 92 Pleasant St., has announced his candidacy for one of the two seats for a three-year term on the Board of Selectmen.

"I can help provide leadership on the board of selectmen," Koed said. "My experience on the Advisory Committee and on the Board of Water Commissioners will help me to provide leadership to deal with the many challenges facing Cohasset."

Koed is 47 years old and is married to Lisa R. (Herstad) Koed. They have two daughters in the Cohasset public schools; Ashley, 16 and Mariel, 12. He has lived in Cohasset for 38 years, and is a 1969 graduate of Cohasset High School. Koed is a graduate of UMass/Boston and is presently a candidate for Master of Science in Public Affairs, John W. McCormack Institute, UMass/Boston, June 1999.

Koed was a member and chairman of the Board of Water Commissioners, 1994-1997, during one of the most active and challenging periods for that board. During his term, the water commissioners completed an emergency study of the distribution system, and solved the low pressure problems in two parts of Cohasset by constructing new water mains on Forest Ave. and Beechwood Street.

During Koed's term, the water commission also helped improve the financial position of the water department by remetering the entire town and by proposing new water rates to pay for the current phase of the long-range capital improvement program the board designed to improve the water distribution system.

Fred Koed

Koed is also a former chairman of the advisory committee where he oversaw review of all town budgets, 1983-1987. He worked hard to forge consensus and to reduce the annual tension that existed between the advisory committee and the school committee, thus helping avoid disruptive fights on the floor of Town Meeting.

In 1987, Koed was appointed by the governor to a five-year term on the Cohasset Housing Authority (CHA). During his term on the housing authority, CHA broke ground (next the police/fire station) for eight units of chapter 689 housing for the mentally retarded.

Koed also served as the CHA representative on the Fair Housing Committee, 1987-1989, and on the tenant selection committee for the Habitat for Humanity project on Elm Street, 1992-93.

Koed currently serves as a consumer representative on the state Board of Registration of Real Estate Brokers and Salespeople. He was appointed by Gov. Dukakis in 1990, and was reappointed by Gov. Weld in 1995. In 1991, Koed voted in favor of agency disclosure forms for real estate brokers and salespeople that set a national precedence at the time.

Koed works for the Executive Office for Health and Human Services, Office for Refugees and Immigrants as a systems analyst. Prior to entering state service in 1987, he worked for Hallmark 100 Real Estate in Cohasset as a business manager and earned a GRI (Graduate Real Estate Institute) designation.

Koed was sole proprietor, 1976-1985, of F.R. Koed Painting company, a small business specializing in condominium and apartment decorating in Boston. During this period he was a member of the Boston Chapter of Painting and Decorating Contractors (PDCA) and served a term as president of that chapter.

Roth meets with supporters

Nan Roth met with her supporters over the weekend to kick off her campaign for reelection to the Board of Selectmen.

"Nan Roth is a thoughtful and responsive Selectman with outstanding knowledge of Cohasset," said Deborah Shadd, former president of the PSO and current member of the advisory committee. "For 10 years Nan has worked to bring long-term fiscal and capital analysis and planning to town government. Nan understands the issues facing Cohasset and is a terrific worker for the town."

Shadd has been named treasurer of the campaign and contributions can be sent to her at 31 Summer St. and made payable to "The Committee to Elect Nan Roth." Amyra O'Connell and Cliff Chase are coordinating signs and volunteers for the campaign. Anyone interested in helping is invited to call them at 383-1574.

Koed campaign web page unveiled

The Fred Koed campaign for Selectmen in Cohasset, Mass. today unveiled its "Fred Koed for Selectman" web page on the internet. The web page can be found at http://fred.koed.towns.org.

"This web page will make it easy for Cohasset voters to learn about my candidacy, and to contact the campaign," Koed said. "The page will be updated daily so it will provide up-to-date information until the Town Election on April 10."

The Koed web page includes the email address for the campaign, fred.koed@towns.org, which voters can use to email the candidate. Voters can also call the candidate at 383-6640 or send a fax to the campaign at 383-6502.

FAMILIAR FACES!

We were in Florida last week, and as always happens, saw people from Cohasset — recognized by the Cohasset Skippers baseball hat (from the back) Sam Esposito and his wife Earla! They were visiting their daughter, who lives in Fort Lauderdale, getting some "rays" before Sam's upcoming gallbladder surgery. They both looked wonderful — in fact they shared a funny story. They were in Ireland in the fall and Sammy was, of course, wearing his hat — a man came up and told them that all of the plants he purchased at their flower shop had died — a joke, of course, but he wanted them to know that he, too, was from Cohasset. Sam said that no matter where they go, someone speaks to them after recognizing his skipper hat!

We also had a chance to visit Lawrence Figueiredo for a couple of days — we enjoyed it so much! Larry is wonderful, looks grand, and wanted to be remembered to all of his friends. He is exactly the same — he works 20 hours a day, has the tan, loves what he does and where he is . . . he is special!

A WONDERFUL GENTLEMAN

Now to the hard part — hard in that Gerard Keating will be missed by so many of us! What can I say — have you ever met a nicer, kinder; more thoughtful gentleman? Do you know anyone with as much compassion and love with such a beautiful family, with so many friends? When people talk about "Legends," he was one! He was our very own "Uncle Sam," but he didn't need stilts to stand tall and proud! Gerard was a role model that we were so fortunate to know and love, he will be missed! But, "The Legend" will always live on!

GET WELL SOON

Everyone hopes that Brendan Mulcahy feels much better as he reads this — you hurry up and be fine, Brendan, summer is fast approaching, and we all know that's your favorite season.

Some Things to Know About Political Advertising

Newspapers reach almost 90% of adults each week. Their heaviest readership is among groups that are most likely to vote. These are the people who are actively involved in and concerned about their communities and the quality of life: professionals, high-income earners, well educated, ages 35-64.

Community Newspaper Company South offers an unparalleled variety of creative options with which to state your political case – page and placement options, large and small space opportunities, continuity, color along with customized slipsheets.

Whether you're a candidate, campaign manager, or media director, we'll help you decide how to best utilize your campaign dollars.

POLITICAL ADVERTISING GUIDELINES

★ Placement of political advertisements will be accepted on a first come, first served basis. Guaranteed preferred placement allows the candidate to pick a specific page number, not a specific location on that page. Guaranteed preferred placement will be charged an additional 25% premium. Minimum size for preferred placement is 10 column inches.

★ Pre-payment of all political ads is required, with no exceptions. Cash, check or credit cards are accepted.

★ Deadline for political advertisements is 5 business days prior to publication date. Proofs will be available if submitted at least one week prior to publication.

★ Retail rates apply. Contract rate may apply if the candidate signs a contract and pays in advance the total dollars committed per the agreement.

★ In accordance with Massachusetts laws Chapter 56, Section 39, all political advertisements must be accompanied by a signed authorization statement. Political advertisements must also be accompanied by a Community Newspaper Company indemnification and Limitation of Liability Agreement. Forms are available from your local Community Newspaper Company office. You are welcome to as many as you require.

★ The designation "Political Advertisement" must run above each column of the advertisement.

★ The advertisers/candidates are responsible for the accuracy of the content of material being presented in their advertising, including written permission for the use of photographic likenesses for persons other than the candidate and endorsements.

★ All ads must be submitted in legible handwriting or typewritten form.

★ In the last issue of the newspaper prior to any election, political advertisements in which it is clear that the intent is to deny opponents time for rebuttal will not be accepted. All ads are accepted at the discretion of the publisher.

★ All advertisements must be bordered and use a typeface distinct from the news typeface.

★ All political ads need to include the affiliation of the organization placing the ad, name, title and address (i.e., Citizens to Elect John Doe, Mary Smith, Treasurer, 123 Main St., Weymouth, MA 02190).

Unusual side dishes are delightful

MAY I PRESENT

ELLYANN CHATTERTON

If you are like I am, you are trying to "think spring." It's rather hard right now, as there is a raging snowstorm outside — but that means I dig out all of my old recipes and try to prepare for the upcoming months. Maybe a brunch at Easter, birthdays that are coming, vacations, company ... the list goes on!

Anyway, the thing I like best to find unusual sidedishes, something that looks as wonderful as it tastes! And, I must confess that I often look to "convenience foods" to help with the time factor (there is never enough of that). I found these recipes for frozen potatoes, just take a bag out of the freezer and start from there!

Potato-Bacon Frittata

The first recipe is a Potato-Bacon Frittata, delicious for either breakfast or supper:

3 tablespoons butter or margarine
2 cups frozen potatoes with onions and peppers
6 large eggs
2 tablespoons milk
1/4 tsp. each, salt and pepper
1 cup shredded cheddar cheese
6 slices bacon, cooked and crumbled diced fresh tomatoes or picante sauce for garnish

Melt butter in a 10-inch nonstick skillet over medium heat; add frozen potatoes and cook 10 mins. or until browned. Combine eggs and next 3 ingredients, stirring with a wire whisk. Pour over potatoes. As mixture starts to cook, gently lift edges of frittata with a spatula, and tilt pan so uncooked portion flows underneath. If center remains uncooked, carefully turn frittata over, and cook 5 mins. or until center is done. Place frittata on serving platter, sprinkle with the shredded cheese. Cover with foil, let stand 5 mins. Sprinkle with bacon; garnish, if desired. Serve immediately.

Potato-Cheese Puff

1 (22-oz) package frozen mashed potatoes
1/2 tsp. salt
2 cups shredded Cheddar cheese
1 cup whipping cream, whipped

Prepare frozen mashed potatoes according to package directions; stir in salt if desired. Spread potatoes in a lightly greased 2-qt shallow baking dish. Combine cheese and whipped cream, stirring gently; spread mixture over potatoes. Bake at 350 degrees for 25 minutes or until lightly browned. This may also be prepared in 12 (6-ounce) custard cups at 325 degrees for 15 minutes or until puffs are lightly browned.

Hope you will try these two potato recipes, I'm certain you will enjoy them. By the way, if you have a favorite recipe that you would love to share with our readers, please let me know! I'd like to try it, too!

Question of the Week

Again this year in keeping with our tradition, we will pose a Question of the Week to local candidates. Usually we limit the Question to the candidates for contested seats but this year we'd like to make an exception for the two women running unopposed for two open seats on the school committee. With so much in the news about special education, education reform and the school budget, we think our readers would be well served by knowing what Betsy Connolly, 431A King St., and Stephanie Noble, 10 Joy Place, have to say.

Fred Koed, 92 Pleasant St., and incumbents Nan Roth, 7 Highland Ave., and Ronnie McMorris, 89 Doane St., are competing for two seats on the board of selectmen.

And political newcomers Charles Sturdy, 270 Jerusalem Road, and Dr. Robin Lawrence, 15 Beach St., have thrown their hats into the ring for a seat on the board of health. Kevin Ulmer is not seeking reelection.

All candidates, opposed or unopposed, who have not already done so, are invited to submit photographs and formal statements announcing their candidacies.

Starting next week, we will feature candidates' answers to the Question of the Week. Responses should be brief — no more than 250 words — and must be received by 2 p.m. Monday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word count feature on the computer to determine the number of words).

The following are the first Questions of the Week:

For selectman candidates:

• Do you think the town should establish an appointed DPW board that would replace the elected sewer and water commissions?

For board of health candidates:

• Do you support the board of health's new wastewater management plan for septic systems?

For school committee candidates:

• With the projected town deficit, is this the right time to try to bring salaries for experienced teachers up to par with those in neighboring towns?

Candidates may reply by FAX at 781-741-2931 or by mailing or dropping off their responses to the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square, on 73 South St. by 2 p.m., Monday. Be sure to leave enough time for mail delivery. Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street.

We will also publish candidates' corner weekly but it is limited to a few lines (about 100 words) from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers and the like.

The Mariner will not accept Letters to the Editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues.

Candidates are encouraged to advertise their campaigns in the Mariner. For information about deadlines and costs of political advertisements, please contact Claudia Oliver at 781-837-4519.

If you have any questions, please call Mary Ford at 741-2933.

Flouting commitments

TO THE EDITOR:

Those using Bancroft Hall are required to sign a contract which includes clear statements that alcohol may not be served after 10:30 p.m., no music after 10:30 p.m., and the premises vacated by 11 p.m. (There are other strict provisions related to serving of alcohol). Users also sign an errata sheet which restates these important requirements.

Nevertheless, some users do not honor the terms of contract. It is especially willful when the user has not only signed the documents, but has been informed in clear terms well before the event that requested exceptions will not be granted.

There are good reasons for our rules, and they are intended to ensure that Bancroft Hall remains a viable operation, and continues to be available at nominal cost to Cohasset residents (and no cost to non-profits).

Those whose requirements don't match our rules are free to go elsewhere. The requirements are clearly stated in the documents which a prospective user must sign.

Had the rules stated in the signed contract been honored, a recent party could have wound down more pleasantly than the abrupt termination of music and alcohol at 11 p.m., by the necessary intervention of a representative of the Lightkeepers Corporation. Fortunately, the guests were reasonable and departed soon, although probably in a poorer mood than if the host had honored the agreement to begin the shut down at 10:30 p.m. This is but one of many such incidents.

Our civilized society operates effectively only because there is a broad understanding that contracts are to be honored, one's word is to be kept, and rules designed for the common good are respected. There always will be a few irresponsible or thoughtless people who degrade a system dependent on integrity and subvert the pleasantly ordered quality of life associated with it. In our boomer society, it is disturbing to note the increasing tendency to scoff at rules, agreements and morality, if evasion provides some temporary personal advantage.

Well, all we can do to encourage responsibility and shore up civilization is to consider failure to conform to all terms of the contract as grounds for retention of the $200 security deposit.

Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation

Drug program, a waste of time

TO THE EDITOR:

The "Drug Proofing Cohasset," program, described in The Mariner this past week and scheduled for presentation March 2 at Cohasset High School, would have, in my opinion, been better off eliminated entirely. With all due respect to many well-intentioned people, these programs are for the most part a waste of time and effort, both here and around the nation as well. It is ironic also that, although such programs have been a part of the Cohasset public schools for many years, the problems continue and even at times seem to get worse. The statistics provided by the Health Education Department indicate that the problems have not been solved.

With regard to so-called "sexuality education," these programs are not only a waste of time and money, but they are positively counterproductive. You cannot teach about sex apart from morality, and yet it is difficult to teach traditional morality (which is the only one that works) in the public schools. Recommending "safer sex" and condoms and contraception is immoral, evil and degenerate, and will lead to a selfish, corrupt society, characterized by more and more violence, more abortions and even euthanasia. Planned Parenthood propaganda does not belong in public buildings at public expense.

Explaining the FY2000 school budget

EDUCATION MATTERS

KATHY OFSTHUN

Because so much has been written and quoted by others regarding the proposed school budget, the School Committee felt that we should factually explain the needs of the school, detail the proposed increases and address confusing areas.

For fiscal year 2000, we are requesting a 9 percent increase in the school budget. The primary drivers of this increase are teachers' salaries and Special Education costs. Together they account for three-quarters of the needed increase. There has been confusion and misinformation surrounding both of these issues, which the following is intended to clarify.

Teachers' Salaries

Just as for our town employees, raises are calculated based on a system of annual increases and "step" increases. That is, annual raises, which have approximated 3 percent, are given to all and "step" increases are added based on experience. For teachers, there is one other means of increasing one's salary and that is by completing significant advanced coursework and jumping to the next "column." In this way, a Masters degree earns more than a Bachelors degree, etc. The handful of teachers each year who complete the incremental coursework, well deserve this additional bump in salary. This system of steps and columns is ubiquitous and considered the best means of paying teachers for experience and encouraging professional development.

In 50 hours over 18 meetings since summer, we have negotiated a new teachers' contract. That process is nearly complete. Our starting salaries are commensurate with five South Shore towns by which we benchmark ourselves (Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Norwell and Hanover). However, as identified in negotiations three years ago, salaries for the most educated and most experienced teachers fall below the average of the five benchmark communities. Beginning three years ago and continuing now we would like to bring these teachers up to par.

Special Education

Special Education (SPED) costs have climbed dramatically in recent years. These costs can be categorized in two areas: in-district costs for students who are at our schools and require special services, and out-of-district costs for more specialized services that cannot be provided at our schools. The latter is by far the more expensive cost and the biggest factor in the escalation of SPED costs. Cohasset is required to fund the costs for most of these out-of-district programs except in very few cases where the costs may be shared with the Dept. of Education or other state agencies. About 30 students, ages 3-22, are currently in out-of-district programs, and Cohasset is spending approximately $750,000 this year on their education. We have no control over the cost of these programs and it is difficult to predict the movement of children with significant needs in and out of our town. The one dependable fact is, that spending is never precisely what has been budgeted and in recent years has been much higher.

For fiscal 2000, we know of some students who will no longer require out-of-district placement because they are leaving the district or will no longer be eligible. We have always been asked by the town to budget our known costs and not to supplement the budget for possible overruns. Therefore the SPED budget for out-of-district students in fiscal 2000 is actually lower than current actual expenses.

The most important work we can do to improve our SPED budget is to lobby our legislators regarding the state contribution to our district. Recently a meeting was held at the high school with legislators, including Senator Tolman, who explained his proposed bill to aid in the funding of Special Education.

Other Budget Increases

The remaining requested increase to the budget is for staffing needs, increased utility costs at the new school, and minor other additions. The staffing is needed in the following areas:

- as the smallest grade moves out of the Deer Hill, another sixth-grade teacher is needed for the upcoming fifth-graders who have 29 more students than the current sixth-grade class,
- also at the Deer Hill, an additional SPED aide will be needed in the fifth grade as that class has an increased number of students with special needs,
- a technology teacher is needed at the middle school to teach classes on the use of the computer and Internet as well as keyboarding skills, in addition to being a resource to the staff on integrating technology into their curriculum,
- a SPED aide is also needed at the high school where the number of students with special needs is estimated to increase by nine.

We hope this has been helpful in providing you with the numbers and facts regarding the school budget. The School Committee is sensitive to the town's tight fiscal situation, and as a result many requests from the staff and principals have been excluded. We also believe that the community wants first-rate schools that produce top quality students, and that the community is proud of the recent MCAS test results, which objectively rank Cohasset as one of the best districts in the state. The budget increases explained above represent the minimum of what we consider necessary to continue to provide an excellent education for our students. We hope for your continued support.

This is one in an occasional series of columns by members of the school department or school committee.

Problems need special attention

CNC COMMENTARY

DAVID TRUEBLOOD

The debate about how the state should serve children who need special education has grown polarized and poisoned with fear and resentment.

At its worst, the current arrangement pits parents of special needs students against parents of able-bodied students in a battle for the limited resources that are necessary to pay for the good and appropriate education to which both are entitled. Between these two groups stand school administrators who must satisfy both sets of parents, respond to a complex and growing list of state and federal mandates, and balance the books to the satisfaction of local taxpayers.

The current impasse over how special education should be spelled out and how it should be paid for is political, above all. Gov. Paul Cellucci, Senate President Thomas Birmingham, House Speaker Thomas Finneran, and education chief John Silber have allowed this problem to remain unresolved, and they have the power to break the deadlock.

Now it is time for each of them to stop pointing fingers at one another and explaining why it is all the fault of that guy over there that nothing has been done. Any list of improvements must include the following:

- A new and more flexible funding formula that reflects the real cost of special education in each school district, instead of the current formula, which assumes that an arbitrary 15 percent of the school population will require special education. This would especially benefit urban school systems, which often have the greatest number of special needs children.
- A change in the rules of reimbursement that removes the current financial incentive to place children with serious special needs into residential programs, unless that is in their best interest. This is necessary to make the state conform with federal law.
- An increase in state funding that brings Massachusetts more into line with the rest of the country. Today, our state government pays 17 percent of the cost, compared to a national average of 53 percent. An increase would alleviate the current situation, which punishes the school districts that have the greatest need.
- Create a state-wide audit board. This would include a team that travels from school to school to make sure that children who do not qualify for special education do not receive it. Today, in the absence of effective oversight, anecdotal rumors of abuse are wide-spread. This board would add an essential check on the potential abuse of the system.
- Remove non-educational expenses for children with special needs from school budgets. Health-related costs for disabled children is a new and increasing burden for school administrators. These children must have their legitimate health needs accommodated, but no superintendent should be forced to choose between, say, a special duty nurse and a program that offers enrichment to regular students. Nor should a program that is, in essence, therapeutic rather than educational be bundled into a school budget.
- End the stand-off over the wording of the state standard of special education. The foolish and distracting battle over whether the goal of our state program should be "maximum feasible development" or "free and appropriate education" is irrelevant. No one can say with any certainty what each of those statements means, or how switching from one to the other would affect the boys and girls who are in the special education system today.

A new system of special education would honor two important accomplishments in which Massachusetts residents can take great pride. First, we have a true consensus in Massachusetts that all of our children deserve the education that helps them to achieve their full potential. That is a genuinely noble and progressive standard that must be respected and supported. Second, we have already faced up to the need to renew and strengthen our public education system to meet the needs of a new age. The proof of that is the Education Reform Act of 1993, which raises standards for all of our schools and has introduced a new level of accountability to public education.

The current deadlock, which threatens both of these notable achievements, is especially baffling because in some cases it is the same leaders who delivered them who seem unable to act decisively today.

We need action today to strengthen and reform our special education system, on behalf of all of our children.

Is marriage making a comeback?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Dust off the "I dos" and the "love, honor and obeys" of the 1950s. Marriage as June and Ward Cleaver knew it is making a comeback. And the states themselves are giving it a hand.

The fine art of living together without benefit of clergy, developed to its highest form by the children of the 1960s, appears to be under attack from the unlikeliest sources — college researchers, as well as the government.

The Census Bureau reported the other day that 110.6 million Americans over the age of 17 were married and still living together last year. That's 56 percent of the adult population.

Of course, the figure is down from 68.4 percent in 1970, but, says census expert Terry Lugaila, it is declining at a decreasing rate, meaning more and more people are less and less inclined to "live in sin," as we used to say.

Those of us who are entering the realm of cohabitation by way of the altar are getting a boost by several states, backed up by the latest polls that have discovered that marriage is good for you and those around you.

Those of us who are entering the realm of cohabitation by way of the altar are getting a boost by several states, backed up by the latest polls that have discovered that marriage is good for you and those around you.

The National Marriage Project at Rutgers University has come up with research that indicates "unmarried couples have lower levels of happiness and well-being than married couples."

"Living together outside of marriage increases the domestic violence for men and the risk of physical and sexual abuse for children," report the sociologists David Popenoe and Barbara Whitehead.

Another study, conducted in Great Britain, finds that children living with unmarried parents are 20 times more likely to be abused and if mama is living with a new boy friend the odds increase to 33 times.

And, if you're "living in sin" right now, don't think that a quick trip to church or the justice of the peace will rescue you from the dark cloud that the Rutgers project say hangs over the wedless.

Popenoe and Whitehead found that those living together outside of marriage who decide to tie the knot are 46 percent more likely to divorce and "no positive contribution of cohabitation to marriage has ever been found."

Last February 14 may have been Valentines Day to most of us but in Louisiana it was also "National Marriage Day," duly proclaimed by Gov. Mike Foester Jr.

"Marriage is the outward visible sign of a man's and a woman's desire to create a lasting love, to forger a tie so strong that a child's heart cane rely upon it," said Foster.

At the same time, the city of Culpepper, Va., adopted a "community marriage policy" aimed at acquainting couples with the hazards of married life and helping out when a marriage is in trouble.

The plan, first proposed by religion writer Mike McManus, includes premarital counseling, a formal inventory of the couple's strengths and weaknesses plus classes in morality and making marriage work.

If all that fails, the "community marriage policy" also provides for a volunteer "mentoring couple" assigned by church or synagogue to help those marriages that have become rocky in spite of the precautions.

And, if you're already living in sin, have no fear of punishment under the new policy. Just try to keep your hands off each other until a priest or minister can get around to rescuing you.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Takes issue with column

TO THE EDITOR,

I must take issue on some of the statements on Mr. McElroy's 'Budget Busters' column.

The statement that people with learning disabilities were living behind drawn curtains and living marginalized life styles is not correct; people with physical disabilities perhaps most people with learning disabilities were considered slow, stupid , etc.. and were either pushed through school or dropped out, went into the military via the draft, or worked in manufacturing jobs. These people were clearly misdiagnosed or the expertise regarding these disabilities were unknown. In today's technological age, with proper intervention, these same types of students are proving they belong in the academic arena and can learn with assistance like every other child.

As far as the Massachusetts standard "fostering abuses", this must be stopped. If Mr. McElroy has knowledge of any abuses in the Cohasset school system, he must immediately bring them to the attention of the superintendent or school committee so it can be stopped immediately. No program should have any abuses. Under our current mandate, the cost of students under special needs is 22% less than the rest of the nation. I believe the answer is MA has had its Special Education laws much longer and with early intervention and correct diagnoses, the cost per student is less.

When a parent feels their child is sick, they usually go to their pediatrician. A diagnosis is made, a treatment prescribed, and hopefully the child gets better. If not, most parents will go back to the pediatrician and have their child re-examined. If the pediatrician says nothing is wrong, but a parent feels that there is, a second opinion is at their option. Parents know their children best. It's unfair to say parents "shop around" until an attorney is satisfied-parents perhaps, but an attorney? I have yet to meet another parent who has a child with special needs who feels fortunate. Quite frankly, it's heartbreaking.

To have children included is important to the entire school district and quite frankly, it is the law-both state and federal.

As to the cost of special education in the Cohasset school system being 25% can be disproved at the latest budget hearings the school committee had. Mr. McElroy's calculation on SPED cost through the year 2010 can be argued, but more importantly let him produce his calculation for all town departments, such as police, fire, public works, sewer etc. What would be the figure in 2010 for these?

The South Shore collaborative deals with students who could not be mainstreamed although many tried. It's appropriate for every student to enter the school system and fit in. Parents and teachers can quickly decide if it's working,. Again another heartbreak for the child, who because of their physical and cognitive problems, can't be mainstreamed. But it is appropriate for each child to have that opportunity. Would any of the parents with children in school sit back and let someone determine what's appropriate for them? Would any of us want to have a door shut in our face because we were not deemed "appropriate"?

I don't know what SPED parent looks to the schools as day care centers. In today's society, we do count on the schools to be open. To say that SPED parents are any different than the working parent households is outrageous.

Mr. McElroy is correct when he states the funding figures. The state must help more. To be sitting on the kind of surplus they have on the backs of property tax payers is just plain wrong.

Don't blame the system that is open to all. The real culprit is the state for not helping out.

McElroy misses the mark

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Parent's Advisory Council for Special Needs would like to commend the Cohasset Mariner for its timely and balanced report on the issues surrounding special education in Massachusetts. The articles by Constance Lindner about autism, and the articles on inclusion and special education reform efforts by Chris Szechenyi were accurate, fair and contribute positively to public understanding of issues that will soon be debated at the State level. However, we take issue with the companion article by former School Committee member Joe McElroy.

As is his habit, Mr. McElroy consistently mixes small amounts of fact with major errors. It is beyond our understanding as to why the Mariner has chosen a person who failed to complete his term on the School Committee as a columnist on education issues. Be that as it may, Mr. McElroy has managed to once again absolutely miss the mark in his commentary.

His statement that learning disabled persons are now "gainfully employed" as opposed to living lives "behind drawn curtains, unproductive and their lives marginalized" shows a total ignorance of what the term learning disabled mean, and perpetuates a stereotype that has been years in the undoing. A second statement, that special education has spawned a "cottage industry of lawyers...who successfully impose unreasonable demands on local school districts" is proved patently incorrect in Chris Szechenyi's article, which notes that of 603 hearings, "21 resulted in decisions that favored the school. Pa[illegible] won in nine cases, and the majority were settled by compromise". These statistics are backed up by the Department of Education which show that schools prevail in hearing decisions approximately 70% of the time.

Mr. McElroy notes that the term "maximum possible development...imposes no limits", making this standard a "lawyers dream". We would point out that the federal standard "free and appropriate education" also imposes no limits. Both standards are subject to interpretation by the person(s) applying those standards. We would like Mr. McElroy to think about who he would like to make those decisions about of child of his. The "maximum possible development" (maximum feasible benefit) standard was developed to encourage inclusion (the least expensive prototype) and to overcome prejudicial views about the ability of special needs students to learn. Massachusetts ranks 4th in the nation in including special needs students in regular education classrooms, and when the per pupil cost for special education is compared to the per pupil cost for regular education, Massachusetts is 22% lower than the national average.

Mr. McElroy's comments about Chapter 766 becoming a "subsidy for childcare", and his suggestion that "parents contribute 20% for costs associated with early intervention and summer schooling" are absurd and in the case of the latter, most likely a civil right violation.

The Cohasset Parents Advisory Council does agree that the State has abdicated its responsibility in funding Chapter 766, and is, like many PACs around the state, advocating strongly for an increase in State funding. We hope that by the time this letter appears in the Mariner, many of you will have attended the Special Education Forum that we hosted on Tuesday evening, that you came and expressed your views, but also listened to and learned from the views of others, and will have the information that you need to lobby for change at the State level. The PAC is proud to be on of the "strident advocacy groups" that Mr. McElroy refers to, and we believe it is our job to advocate for changes that benefit ALL children and that no child is best served when financial constraints pit the education of one group of children against another.

Our schools: replace, repair, close?

THE WAY I SEE IT

JOE MCELROY

Part IV: Capital costs

Last year's Capital Asset Assessment projected the need to spend $10,000,000 on accessibility and maintenance upgrades to the Deer Hill and Middle School-High School (MS-HS) over the next 10 years. The probability of receiving timely 60 percent State cost-sharing assistance is poor, but essential.

My proposal is to house the Cohasset School District in four buildings: a PK to 4th grade elementary school, a 5th to 8th grade Middle School (MS), and a 9th to 12th grade High School (HS) with a Town/School library co-located and administered by the Paul Pratt Library trustees. The Superintendent and his immediate staff would join other Town offices at the current Paul Pratt Library.

The 4th grade will fit into the new Osgood School. We could build a new 5th to 8th grade Middle School behind the current Deer Hill (in the direction of Route 3A). It would be great to separate the 7th and 8th grades from the High School. This would provide more open space, playing field and better traffic patterns/parking both at the Sohier and Pond Street locations. The School Building Committee is not going to correct the "sardine" site layout of the new Osgood School with its proposed $50,000 Band-Aid.

By moving the Superintendent and his staff to the Paul Pratt Library, we make good use of the building and save an architectural "gem" for public usage. The Old Osgood School becomes available for privatized elderly housing. Replace the over-sized High School (current enrollment is 52% of MS-HS capacity) with a new, smaller, state-of-the-art facility for grades 9 through 12. The High School architectural concept would include a library for both the Town and High School.

The Paul Pratt Library trustees plan to occupy the old Osgood School is estimated to cost about $3,000,000. It is ludicrous to have four libraries (each school and the Pratt Library) in a Town of less than 8,000 residents. Relocation of the Paul Pratt Library to the Old Osgood School and renovation of the DH and MS-HS would cost Cohasset taxpayers an estimated $13,000,000. Using State Department of Education construction criteria we could build a new Middle School and a new High School with student capacities of 600 and 400, respectively for $24,420,000 and receive 60% matching funds. The cost to Cohasset taxpayers would be $9,768,000 for the new MS and HS plus perhaps $1,500,000 for the joint Town/School library. That's a net cost to the Cohasset taxpayer of $11,268,000 (absent financing costs). We should be able to keep easily within budget costs because site preparation would be minimal. All our facilities would be new and save Cohasset about $2,000,000. Whatever we decide to do, let's place more emphasis on basics such as adequate site layout, projected overhead operating costs, energy efficiency, maintainability, common-use facilities and security. The new Osgood School's carpeting and wooden hallway casement look beautiful right now, but they will be a major maintenance burden going forward. It is criminal that we have built a new school that is not being kept clean (no fault of the over-committed custodial staff). Adequate interior security was sacrificed for aesthetic appeal and must also be addressed. It is equally outrageous that we have 1,200 students in three buildings that have no maintenance program. Nothing should be approved without having "in-place" a plan and the resources to maintain our school buildings.

If we spend $10-13,000,000 on the Old Osgood library, Deer Hill, Middle-High schools without State assistance, we're not going to get "bang for the buck." We will be planning another major facilities upgrade within a decade. Yes, we will be in compliance with the Americans With Disabilities Act (as we should and must) but will have very little else to show for the investment.

Another option is a political "hot potato." Specifically, close Cohasset High School (grades 9-12) and send our students to schools in neighboring towns. Hingham High School offers 21 extra-curricular programs compared to Cohasset's 14! Its High School program of studies includes nine computer courses and 15 electives in business education! We experience very significant transfers to private and parochial schools at the 6th and 8th grade levels. During the past five years, our graduating classes have fluctuated between 60 and 75 students. Our cost to educate 300 High School students exceeds $3,600,000 or $12,000 per student (very high). We could tear down the current Deer Hill and MS-HS. A new and smaller state-of-the-art 4th through 8th grade Middle School would fit nicely jon the Pond Street site. The Town/School library would be co-located with the new Middle School. We would eliminate $10,974,000 in construction costs (Cohasset taxpayers would save $4,389,6000 in addition to the almost $2,000,000 previously documented) and long-range operating expenses would be significantly less. Let's hear your ideas and plan for 50, not 10 years.

Land-mine survivor takes message to White House

"We called on the White House to sign the treaty," he said. "So we can walk into a new century with honor and hope for a mine-free world."

The US has not signed the treaty because of land mines in the de-militarized zone in North Korea where 37,000 American troops are stationed and where removal of the mines could pose some risk. Part of the problem, White explains, is that anti-tank land mines are bundled with anti-personnel land mines and to "de-bundle" the mines and remove the anti-personnel ones is difficult.

Nevertheless, it is within the president's power to sign the treaty that allows four years to destroy stockpiles and ten years to remove land mines from the soil.

LSN is a big spoke in the wheel to ban land mines that consists of about 1,000 non-government organizations worldwide with the same mission. When the International Campaign to Ban Landmines (ICBL) was presented the Nobel Peace Prize in Nov. 1997, LSN was invited to share in the prize. The Nobel Peace Prize is awarded annually to those whose work during the preceding year has been of the greatest benefit to mankind.

At the time, White said while it was an honor to be invited to the ceremony, there was much work left to be done.

"We called on the White House to sign the treaty. So we can walk into a new century with honor and hope for a mine-free world."

— Jerry White, land-mine survivor

"Before we raise our champagne flutes, let's make sure those in countries held hostage to land mines feel the difference," he said.

Today, LSN's new patron is Queen Noor of Jordan. White hopes to invite the queen, who is American and graduated from Princeton, to Cohasset at some point as part of a fund-raising event in the Boston area. But for the time being, all the queen's travel is on hold because she is in mourning for her husband, King Hussein, who passed away last month of cancer.

White said Queen Noor is an appropriate choice as patron for LSN because she understands the issue that 300,000 land mines pollute the Jordan Valley.

He said that Jordan was one of the first mid-eastern countries to sign the land-mine treaty. King Hussein wanted a land-mine free Jordan by the year 2000 and at LSN's suggestion, the US pledged $1.9M toward to help Jordan realize that dream, White explained.

"The Holy Land where Jesus preached and was baptized is largely a big, fat land mine field," White said.

Monday, Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vermont, the senate's leading advocate for the land-mine treaty, participated in the press conference to try and persuade other lawmakers to push for signing of the land-mine ban.

LSN's patron saint is the late Princess Diana who drew international attention to the scourge of land mines on her trips to Bosnia and Angola in 1997. White and his partner, Ken Rutherford, another amputee, met the princess in June 1997 at a land mine conference where she was the keynote speaker. She subsequently chose LSN to host her three-day visit to Bosnia in August that year. The princess went house-to-house visiting land-mine survivors and their families.

LSN, founded in 1995, is dedicated to helping the thousands of land-mine victims alive today.

According to LSN, someone steps on a land mine every 22 minutes. There are more than 100 million land mines planted around the world; 25,000 individuals stepped on land mines last year.

White said the land mine that exploded under his foot in 1984 was planted years before by Syrian soldiers retreating during the Arab/Israeli war. The soldiers apparently hoped the land mine would maim or kill Israel troops.

Instead the land mine waited silently in the ground for nearly 17 years, said White who was armed only with a backpack and an Israeli dictionary, until he stepped on it blowing off part of his right leg.

Ready to row

19th Snow Row Saturday

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

It has been held for the past 18 years, it's the largest event of its kind in the United States and second-oldest in the country. And it's held off the shores of Hull Gut. Competitors from all over the northeast will be on hand to test their abilities on the open waters.

Come this Saturday at noon, nearly 200 boatsmen will make the wild sprint to their vessels next to Pemberton Pier and traverse the 3-3/4 mile triangular course in the 19th Snow Row.

Hull Lifesaving Museum director and the race's founder, Ed McCabe, has seen the event grow from four boats its inaugural year to a record high of more than 200 last March with 2,000 spectators.

Rowers from New York to Maine will hit town to compete in the growing, prestigious event in a variety of boats.

"It represents the entire cross-section of boats around New England," McCabe said. "Everybody who rows on the open water shows up for this."

The triangular course heads out to Windmill Point, around Sheep Island and around Harry's Rock. The distance is exactly one league (3-3/4 miles). McCabe joked that the first-place finisher is not only the Snow Row winner, but also "American League Champion."

The sprint start, also known as a "LeMans" start, was named after a car race in France where the drivers sprint to their vehicles. The Snow Row is believed to have the only LeMans start in the country. It is often used in rowing events in Australia.

It's the boaters and their various crafts which give the event its quirky charm. Prizes are presented in several categories including Work boats, Livery boats, Coxed boats, Ocean Shells and Ocean Kayaks.

The Work boats are made up of Dories and Peapods. The boats were originally made to carry supplies and loads of fish, and are notoriously slow. Livery boats can have one, two, three or four rowers per vessel and are made up of White Halls, Wherres, Irish Curragh and "Development" boats. Coxed boats are driven by the coxswain and the rowers use one oar, as compared to the two used on the Work and Livery boats. The bows of the Coxed vessels have their bows point towards the beach at the start and the rowers make a 180-degree turn after the sprint to the water's edge.

McCabe said there will be a number of awards in the different categories.

The Cohasset High wrestling team prepares for a match during the season. The team is headed to the New Englands this weekend in Vermont.

Rossi takes his place in CHS wrestling history

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

The wrestling season has been a long one for Mike Rossi.

While the regular wrestling season stretches from the week after Thanksgiving to the middle of February, Rossi's has been far longer than that. Wrestling for club team Orange Crush tacked on additional months in the preseason, and now Rossi's success this year gives him the option to wrestle until April.

Not bad for someone who points out that he started wrestling because he was "too short to play basketball."

But if Rossi turned to the mat because he wasn't built for hoops, then it was a perfect match. Rossi won the Division 3 state championship in the 152 lbs. division this year, and took third in the state among all divisions (All-States.)

He will wrestle in Essex Junction, VT. on Saturday at the New England Championships and has the option of wrestling at the National Championships next month.

After joining the wrestling team in ninth grade, Rossi fell in love with the sport and showed a "dedication and interest and love that makes it fitting for him to become a state champion," according to Coach Torin Sweeney.

Indeed, Rossi decided to make wrestling his sport and, after a fourth place finish in last year's state championships, opted not to play football this year so he could concentrate on bettering his mat skills. In Sweeney's words, this turned "a good athlete into a great athlete."

"Mike's goal when he stepped on the mat as a freshman was to win a state championship. He became really interested in the history of Cohasset wrestling. He was always looking at the names on the wall, asking about their styles, their moves, what made them what they were," Sweeney says.

"Mike's goal when he stepped on the mat as a freshman was to win a state championship. He became really interested in the history of Cohasset wrestling. He was always looking at the names on the wall, asking about their styles, their moves, what made them what they were.."
COHASSET COACH TORRIN SWEENEY

But folk lore and tradition weren't the only things which appealed to Rossi.

Wrestling is a unique sport in that it pits two athletes against each other in a way no other sport, save maybe boxing, can. While sports like baseball, football, soccer, and basketball are often a series of one-on-one moments, wrestling is nothing but that, two competitors facing each other in an enclosed space. No sticks, gloves, balls, or pads.

"I like the idea that everything's on your shoulders. I like team sports, too, but the one- on-one competition is what drives me," Rossi says.

Another factor in Rossi's success, apart from his obvious ability and passion for the sport, has been the roles which his teammates have played. These wrestlers are no slouches themselves.

At the state championships, Craig Sheerin, Chris Pratt, and Luke Caldwell all took second place, Justin Golden took third place, Mike Baird finished fifth, and John-Paul Laugelle gathered a sixth place finish.

At the All-States, Sheerin and Golden both wrestled extremely well, both finishing sixth.

But as much as wrestling is an individual sport, much of a single athlete's success can stem from the team's commitment. Seniors like Baird, Caldwell, Golden, Laugelle, and Ben Littauer all share Rossi's love for wrestling. They bring to practice a professionalism and approach to the sport which raises the level of intensity with which their teammates strive to achieve. Sweeney is quick to credit Rossi's teammates with helping him along the way.

"All of these guys had the ability to win a state championship. In wrestling, and a lot of people don't understand this, everything has to peak at the right time. Things come down to luck, hard work, ability, and taking advantage of opportunities. Michael capitalized on all these things."

Sweeney, who coached a state champion just two years ago when Kevin Duffy took home the trophy, expresses pride in Rossi and all of his teammates. And he shares the feeling with Mike that opting for pins instead of jump shots was probably a good idea.

According to LSN, someone steps on a land mine every 22 minutes. There are more than 100 million land mines planted around the world; 25,000 individuals stepped on land mines last year.

White said the land mine that exploded under his foot in 1984 was planted years before by Syrian soldiers retreating during the Arab/Israeli war. The soldiers apparently hoped the land mine would maim, not kill Israel troops.

Instead the land mine waited silently in the ground for nearly 17 years, said White who was armed only with a backpack and an Israeli dictionary, until he stepped on it blowing off part of his right leg.

Ready to row

19th Snow Row Saturday

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

It has been held for the past 18 years, it's the largest event of its kind in the United States and second-oldest in the country. And it's held off the shores of Hull Gut. Competitors from all over the northeast will be on hand to test their abilities on the open waters.

Come this Saturday at noon, nearly 200 boatsmen will make the wild sprint to their vessels next to Pemberton Pier and traverse the 3-3/4 mile triangular course in the 19th Snow Row.

Hull Lifesaving Museum director and the race's founder, Ed McCabe, has seen the event grow from four boats its inaugural year to a record high of more than 200 last March with 2,000 spectators.

Rowers from New York to Maine will hit town to compete in the growing, prestigious event in a variety of boats.

"It represents the entire cross-section of boats around New England," McCabe said. "Everybody who rows on the open water shows up for this."

The triangular course heads out to Windmill Point, around Sheep Island and around Harry's Rock. The distance is exactly one league (3-3/4 miles). McCabe joked that the first-place finisher is not only the Snow Row winner, but also "American League Champion."

The sprint start, also known as a "LeMans" start, was named after a car race in France where the drivers sprint to their vehicles. The Snow Row is believed to have the only LeMans start in the country. It is often used in rowing events in Australia.

It's the boaters and their various crafts which give the event its quirky charm. Prizes are presented in several categories including Work boats, Livery boats, Coxed boats, Ocean Shells and Ocean Kayaks.

The Work boats are made up of Dories and Peapods. The boats were originally made to carry supplies and loads of fish, and are notoriously slow. Livery boats can have one, two, three or four rowers per vessel and are made up of White Halls, Wherres, Irish Curragh and "Development" boats. Coxed boats are driven by the coxswain and the rowers use one oar, as compared to the two used on the Work and Livery boats. The bows of the Coxed vessels have their bows point towards the beach at the start and the rowers make a 180-degree turn after the sprint to the water's edge.

McCabe said there will be a number of awards in the different categories.

The Cohasset High wrestling team prepares for a match during the season. The team is headed to the New Englands this weekend in Vermont.

Rossi takes his place in CHS wrestling history

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

The wrestling season has been a long one for Mike Rossi.

While the regular wrestling season stretches from the week after Thanksgiving to the middle of February, Rossi's has been far longer than that. Wrestling for club team Orange Crush tacked on additional months in the preseason, and now Rossi's success this year gives him the option to wrestle until April.

Not bad for someone who points out that he started wrestling because he was "too short to play basketball."

But if Rossi turned to the mat because he wasn't built for hoops, then it was a perfect match. Rossi won the Division 3 state championship in the 152 lbs. division this year, and took third in the state among all divisions (All-States.)

He will wrestle in Essex Junction, VT. on Saturday at the New England Championships and has the option of wrestling at the National Championships next month.

After joining the wrestling team in ninth grade, Rossi fell in love with the sport and showed a "dedication and interest and love that makes it fitting for him to become a state champion," according to Coach Torin Sweeney.

Indeed, Rossi decided to make wrestling his sport and, after a fourth place finish in last year's state championships, opted not to play football this year so he could concentrate on bettering his mat skills. In Sweeney's words, this turned "a good athlete into a great athlete."

"Mike's goal when he stepped on the mat as a freshman was to win a state championship. He became really interested in the history of Cohasset wrestling. He was always looking at the names on the wall, asking about their styles, their moves, what made them what they were," Sweeney says.

"Mike's goal when he stepped on the mat as a freshman was to win a state championship. He became really interested in the history of Cohasset wrestling. He was always looking at the names on the wall, asking about their styles, their moves, what made them what they were.."
COHASSET COACH TORRIN SWEENEY

But folk lore and tradition weren't the only things which appealed to Rossi.

Wrestling is a unique sport in that it pits two athletes against each other in a way no other sport, save maybe boxing, can. While sports like baseball, football, soccer, and basketball are often a series of one-on-one moments, wrestling is nothing but that, two competitors facing each other in an enclosed space. No sticks, gloves, balls, or pads.

"I like the idea that everything's on your shoulders. I like team sports, too, but the one- on-one competition is what drives me," Rossi says.

Another factor in Rossi's success, apart from his obvious ability and passion for the sport, has been the roles which his teammates have played. These wrestlers are no slouches themselves.

At the state championships, Craig Sheerin, Chris Pratt, and Luke Caldwell all took second place, Justin Golden took third place, Mike Baird finished fifth, and John-Paul Laugelle gathered a sixth place finish.

At the All-States, Sheerin and Golden both wrestled extremely well, both finishing sixth.

But as much as wrestling is an individual sport, much of a single athlete's success can stem from the team's commitment. Seniors like Baird, Caldwell, Golden, Laugelle, and Ben Littauer all share Rossi's love for wrestling. They bring to practice a professionalism and approach to the sport which raises the level of intensity with which their teammates strive to achieve. Sweeney is quick to credit Rossi's teammates with helping him along the way.

"All of these guys had the ability to win a state championship. In wrestling, and a lot of people don't understand this, everything has to peak at the right time. Things come down to luck, hard work, ability, and taking advantage of opportunities. Michael capitalized on all these things."

Sweeney, who coached a state champion just two years ago when Kevin Duffy took home the trophy, expresses pride in Rossi and all of his teammates. And he shares the feeling with Mike that opting for pins instead of jump shots was probably a good idea.

News from the Cohasset Sailing Club

Cohasset Sailing Club Board of Directors and its members met Thursday, Feb. 11, at the Lightkeepers' House for the annual meeting. The following officers were elected for the 1999-2000 season; Commodore, Chuck Peterson; Vice Commodore, Ann Musto; Treasurer, Peter Pescatore; and Clerk, Sandy Crough.

Topics discussed were the increases of membership fees for families to $125 per family and training fees increased to $110 per child and $110 per adult.

The children's training classes will be delayed and begin one week after Cohasset public schools close in order to allow for proper instructor training and orderly sign-up of sailors.

There will be an adult representative from the Sailing Club during sign up and throughout the sailing season. Any parent, who has a concern, is encouraged to call a board member at home during the season. More information will follow in the membership mailing.

The Officers and Board of Directors of the Sailing Club remind all residents of Cohasset that swimming off the Sailing Club docks is not permitted. The Sailing Club will not take responsibility for any unauthorized use of its docks or landings for swimming or boating of non-members. Proper use of the Sailing Club docks requires a yearly membership available through the annual membership drive which is mailed townwide in the late spring.

If you would like more information, call Commodore Chuck Peterson at 383-6194 or Vice Commodore Ann Musto at 383-0401.

"We try to award as many prizes as possible," he said.

The biggest variable of the Snow Row over the years has been the weather conditions on race day. McCabe said it has never hailed, but rowers have gone up against thick fog, snow, hot, humid conditions, high winds and freezing cold. Because the race is held in March, a very volatile time of year for weather, conditions are always a question mark.

McCabe just shruggs off the weather as best he can. "It looks like we're going to get bad weather," he said. "What I hope for, though, is irrelevant.

What McCabe will undoubtedly get is another large field with plenty of enthusiastic rowers.

Wintry nor'easter plows through Cohasset

Was third storm of the season

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Last week's Nor'easter settled an eight-inch mantle of snow on Cohasset, which sent schoolchildren's spirits soaring, adults' shovels shoveling, and the DPW sanding, salting and plowing.

"How many hours?" asked Harold Litchfield, department of public works supervisor.

"Too many," he answered. "We were out a long time, 23 of them, because it kept snowing and snowing and snowing."

Snowmen and the children who built them can credit the input of Litchfield to school superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey which led to school being closed Thursday and Friday.

"I talked to the superintendent between 4:30 and 5 a.m. each snow morning to tell him whether things were plowed," said Litchfield. "I told him that the roads were very, very slippery and that it would be hard to plow the roads with school buses on them. He also checks with other schools before making his own decision."

The school days missed Jan. 15, as well as the last week, will be added on to the end of the school year.

"Certainly, we would prefer to keep the kids in school now rather than at the end of the year, but given the changeable weather conditions, we didn't want to risk their safety," said Malvey. "If the day had started on a sunnier note, then perhaps we could have opened."

Plowers, five hired trucks for private ways, employees of the RTF landfill and a school janitor joined DPW workers in tackling the snowy mess which the weekend's alternating rain, sun and mild temperature melted away.

Some residents hunkered down for a snowbound evening by ordering in from Victoria's Pizza. "I wouldn't say we were really busy, but deliveries were the better part of the business we had," said manager Ted Heapes. "Snow is always a problem safety-wise, but we told customers to expect 15 minutes extra on delivery time and we just took it slow."

"It was a short-lived storm, but a good one. Eight inches in Cohasset, but the Cape definitely hit the jackpot with 24 inches in Harwich."
— Mariner weather observer Bob Skilling

Some drivers could take some tips from Heapes. Five motor vehicle accidents, all snow related, were reported in town.

"I don't believe there were any personal injuries," said Cohasset Police Sergeant Jackson. "The answer to safe driving in weather like this is that people should slow down for the conditions. Basically, that's it."

Meals-on-Wheels also had to forego its deliveries to the 24-30 housebound elders it serves, which is its standard policy. Social Service League administrative secretary Dana Kamoski said that 60 volunteers drivers are covered by liability insurance but are not expected to venture out in storms. Instead, dinners are supplied in advance of foul weather for clients, who generally receive canned foods, such as beef stew, vegetables and cling peaches, to replace their usual hot meal.

Cohasset Elder Affairs had an increase in calls, possibly inspired by overblown weather forecasts.

"The heavy weather coverage creates anxiety for older people," said director Kathy Bryanton. "We had calls seeking reassurance that we could still meet their needs in case of an emergency. We're a town municipal department, working in conjunction with South Shore Elder Services and the executive office of Elder Affairs, so we follow specific guidelines in emergency situations. We had staff here Thursday and Friday. Word is getting out that people can depend on us."

CEA's telephone assurance program" enacted a month ago kept registered nurse Carol Barrett busy.

"I have a list of people that are homebound," she said. "I called to find out if they needed groceries, pharmaceuticals and if they were all set. New callers did ask for help and we responded to their needs, mainly for milk, bread, soup and things like that to take them through the day and the weekend. Also, if they needed pharmaceuticals. Most of the time, our elders are well prepared for issues that come along. They have family and friends that help out, but unfortunately, often their friends are older. I usually tell them not to go out if it's slippery out there and I think that's a good precaution for them. The real problem is when we have winters where it's icy for weeks on end."

The slick roads, school closings and snowy mess left other Cohasseters calling for relief, too.

"As a rule, I think most travel agencies get more calls after a snowstorm," said Rosemary Rhynd, manager at Cohasset Travel. In Rhynd's 20 years in the travel business, she's learned enough about storms to know that they prompt two types of calls. "They call and ask, 'Is my flight leaving? Will it be on time?' and then usually after the snow clears we get other calls from people who say, 'I'm tired of this. Get me out of here!'"

Bob Skilling, who has 46 years of experience tracking South Shore weather from his U.S. weather station at home in Hingham and from the Blue Hill Observatory, said that this has been a mild winter overall, aside for its periodic snowstorms.

"It was a short-lived storm, but a good one," he said. "Eight inches in Cohasset, but the Cape definitely hit the jackpot with 24 inches in Harwich."

It cost $21,260.95 to cover the cost of sand, salt and manpower to clear Cohasset of snow.

"Am I tired of it?" asked Litchfield. "Yes. I've been sick of it for years."

PAC beyond our town."

Sindolar, a senior attorney and chief counsel at the Disability Law Center, Inc. in Boston, explained that civil rights movements in the United States started in the schools with Brown v. Board of Education, which found that all children should have access to equal schools.

He traced the history of special education, where only 25 years ago, special needs children stayed home, were institutionalized or went to special schools.

"That battle began about 30 years ago when parents like you fought for the rights of their children to come to school and enjoy a quality education" he said. "Those lawsuits resolved with the finding that children with disabilities must be allowed to develop as fully as they're able, alongside other children. That's the debate we're currently having, which came out of a civil rights movement."

Sindolar explained that nationally, 53 percent of special education costs are carried by the state and towns bear about 40 percent of the overall cost. But in Massachusetts, the state pays for only 17 percent of special education costs and towns pick up more than 75 percent of the expenditure. (See chart.)

Sen. Tolman, D-Boston, discussed a special education reform bill he will file to attempt to offset the climbing costs of special education that towns are encumbered with and compared it with two other bills.

Tolman's bill calls for $60 million in funding and retains the "maximum feasible benefit" aim in special education from Chapter 766.

He argued against another bill by Harold Lane Jr., D-Holden, specifically because it calls for $18 million in funding as opposed to Tolman's request for $60 million; the funding is not placement neutral and it would repeal the "maximum feasible benefit" wording of Chapter 766.

Selectman Nan Roth asked Tolman what type of support he needed for his bill.

"Let the House and representatives know that they're pitting 'healthy' students and parents against special needs students and parents," he answered.

Elizabeth Fish, pupils services director in Hingham, agreed.

"Since the mid '80s, Prop. 2 1/2 has put people in a difficult situation with each other because school committees have to say, 'This is all the money we have, folks,'" she said.

Former school committee member Joseph McElroy said that it was his impression that a number of groups, such as the state Department of Education, the Massachusetts Teachers Association and others, have endorsed the "free and appropriate" wording for special needs students rights to an education.

"The bottom line is that maximum feasible benefit is what parents need to advocate for," said Tolman. "Children should have the maximum possible development in the least restrictive environment."

"Is there a way we can stop discussion of funding and standards?" asked school committee vice chairman Kathy Ofsthun. "The funding is needed in either case."

"We've cut and cut all we can and need relief for SPED," said Decker Adams, a Scituate school committee member.

"We talk about cutting teachers and that can't benefit anyone," said Betsy Connolly, a candidate for the Cohasset school committee. "We'll see our system go back to prior to Chapter 766."

McElroy argued that the $60 million proposed in Tolman's bill wouldn't keep up with the increasing expense of SPED costs and pointed out that another special education reform bill by Sen. Robert Antonioni, D-Leominster, called for a sliding fee scale for independent evaluations.

"In many cases, parents can't afford this so I say we should keep it where it is," said Tolman, who had shared his own introduction to special education issues with the audience.

(Two of his three children experienced a virus that has left them with serious motor skill problems.)

"I wouldn't wish this on anyone and your heart just sinks every time someone says SPED," said Tolman. "We should be unified in our effort for a special education bill. I don't think we'll address a more important issue than this. We're in the bottom fifth nationally in how we share the burden and if we compromise special needs children, who is next?"

Johanson, whose daughter Kara is nonverbal and has cerebral palsy, has benefited from special education.

"She's made the honor roll every year," he said. "If it hadn't been for Steve Hart, our previous school superintendent, she wouldn't have been mainstreamed — he had a vision."

Johanson said that he asked every principal and SPED director in Cohasset if they knew of any abuses to the system, such as parents seeking out doctors willing to diagnose their child with a learning disability to give the child a competitive edge or make excuses for laziness.

"They need to know what bills are out there and what they're advocating for when they go to legislators."
— Maureen Jerz, PAC co-chair

"Everyone said, 'No, there are no abuses," he said. "But when somebody can get up and paint with a wide brush and say, 'Let's move to the federal system to end the abuses,' well, where are the abuses? Show them. You don't make changes based on a suspicion of abuses."

Johanson said that the forum was arranged because of the current take on SPED students as "budget busters."

"SPED parents are pretty content with what we have and don't want to be singled out as the budget busters," he aid. "That's a little unfair and discriminatory. You don't pay for a fire department only if you've had a fire — it's a town need. No one should deem whether it's appropriate for a child to be allowed in a public school. That's what scares people off with the 'free and appropriate' phrasing, because when there's money involved, you might not want someone deciding what's 'appropriate.' No one would want a door slammed in his face."

Water commission changes town meeting game plan

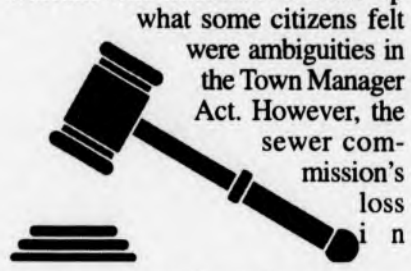
Sewer suit settlement is reason

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Citizens backing an article taking contract awarding authority away from the town manager and giving it back to the water commission are keenly aware of the sewer commission's recent legal battle with the town. The sewer commission lost its attempt to regain contract awarding authority from the town manager. In the wake of that event, backers of the citizens article may amend their proposal on the floor of town meeting. Lead signer John K. McNabb Jr. said the amended motion would still give awarding authority to the water commission. But the town manager would be able to reject or cancel contracts that do not meet all legal requirements or if there is no money for the project.

The original article, which selectmen voted not to support by a 3-2 vote, would have given all contract authority back to the water commission. Because it is a citizen-sponsored article, the selectmen cannot cancel it. The original article that the selectmen did not support will appear in the town meeting warrant. Backers of the article will present any amendments on the floor of town meeting.

McNabb said the language in the original article that will appear in the warrant was intended to clear up what some citizens felt were ambiguities in the Town Manager Act. However, the sewer commission's loss in court weakens the citizens' arguments, McNabb said.



"The judge ruled that the awarding of contracts is up to the town manager and that's that," McNabb said. "It's a total win for the board of selectmen. The intent of our re-draft would be to give contract awarding authority to the water commission and to retain the power of the town manager to make sure the process is done correctly. Nan [Roth] and Merle [Brown] brought up some good points when they said it's important to have a watchdog saying we don't have enough money or something is illegal."

McNabb said the water commission should be allowed to award contracts as part of its responsibility for the town's water system. Selectmen didn't support the original version because they saw it as a step backwards.

"This article would chip away at the professional town manager form of government that we have adopted," said selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris. "Many of us have worked hard to make the town manager form of government work even if we didn't support the act originally. All town boards have made many changes and adapted to the new form of government. There have been many changes to the authority of the board of selectmen. It is my hope that everyone will work with the town manager."

McNabb said he will discuss the proposed changes with the citizens who signed the petition for the original article. If they approve the changes, McNabb will send the amended language to town counsel and the advisory committee for their input. He added that he hoped the advisory committee or the selectmen would support the amended motion.

Judge sides with town in sewer commission lawsuit

"The Town Manager, as chief procurement officer, is the purchasing agent in charge of the procure[ment] of all supplies and services for the city or town and every government body there[of],..." Procurement includes "buying, purchasing... or otherwise acquiring a supply or service, and all functions that pertain to the obtaining of a supply or service, including a description of requirements, selection and solicitation of sources, preparation and award of contract, and all phases of contract administration."

The only exemptions to stipulated in the Cohasset Town Manager Act are for purchases related to buildings controlled by the school committee, the water commission and the sewer commission. There is also a separate stipulation for general school committee purchasing.

The suit stemmed from a decision by Town Manager Mark Haddad to cancel a contract previously awarded by the sewer commission. At the 1996 Annual Town Meeting, voters approved a plan by the sewer commissioners to borrow $6.6 million for new sewers in North Cohasset. The project was bid in four separate phases. The sewer commissioners awarded Phase I in 1997, and work is still continuing on that part of the project. Last year, the sewer commissioners awarded Phase II to D&C Construction Co., Inc. But subsequent bids pushed the overall project cost $2.7 million higher than the $6.6 million that the sewer commission planned to borrow. Voters at the 1998 Annual Town Meeting rejected a request to borrow the additional $2.7 million. Seeing that the town would not have enough money to complete the project, the selectmen voted last April to cancel Phase II. Haddad canceled the contract at the end of last April.

The sewer commissioners said Haddad had usurped their authority to award contracts by canceling Phase II. Sewer commissioners argued that the special act of the Legislature that created their board in 1962 gave them sole contract awarding authority over all sewer related projects. Judge Connolly disagreed. He said language in the Town Manager Act clearly shifted contract awarding authority for all town departments, including the sewer commission, to the town manager. Judge Connolly said the provisions of the Town Manager Act clearly superseded the legislation that created the sewer commission. Members of the sewer commission also argued that taking away their contract awarding authority effectively repeals the act that created the sewer commission. But Judge Connolly refuted that claim, stating that the Town Manager Act applied only to the sewer commission's contract awarding authority.

Haddad said he was happy that the matter had been resolved in favor of the town. He also pointed out that he has never attempted to usurp the power of any town board.

"The sewer commission alleges that I canceled the contract because I thought it was unwise," Haddad said. "It's very important that people understand that I carry out the votes approved at town meeting. I canceled contract II because town meeting did not appropriate the additional $2.7 million needed to complete the project — period. When the contract was canceled on Phase II because we didn't have the funds for Phases III and IV, it's because the town doesn't want to go forward with the sewer connections."

Haddad said he has no desire to meddle in sewer commission policies. It's his job to make sure the contract is legal, and that the town can get the money to do the job.

"It has nothing to do with what I think," Haddad said. "It has nothing to do with usurping their authority. I have nothing to do with their policy. The water commission needed a new emergency generator recently. Do I think they need a new power generator. Who cares what I think? Town meeting thinks the water commission needs a new generator and that's what matters."

Guild said the decision effectively renders the sewer commission toothless.

"We're being asked to take responsibility without being given the authority to carry out our duties," Guild said. "It impairs our ability to function effectively."

Guild did not say which options the sewer commissioners are considering. The entire discussion may be moot for him anyway: he is not running for another term on the sewer commission. Guild will step down in April.

However, a citizen's article in the annual town meeting warrant to help the water commission regain its contract awarding authority may help the sewer commissioners' cause. Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said Guild has asked him to explore the possibility of amending the article to include the sewer commission. McNabb said he didn't know if that was possible, but he was looking into it.

IT'S HAPPENING

Annual Easter Egg Hunt

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct the 23rd annual Easter Egg Hunt, for children 3 thru 11 years of age, on Saturday, March 20, at noon, Deer Hill School Field.

This year there is again the distinct possibility that the Easter Bunny and helpers will be on hand.

Children will be divided into 3 separate chronological groups: Group 1, ages 3+4(with parent), Group 2 ages 5-7, Group 3, ages 8-11

Please gather around your designated area sign before noon. Bring a small paper bag or container for your candy.

Individually wrapped chocolate eggs will be scattered about the designated areas. In each group some of the eggs will be wrapped with masking tape that will have a number on the tape. Should you find one of the numbered eggs, hold on to it as you will receive a prize from the Easter Bunny.

This year's program sponsors are: Cohasset Rotary Club, Veteran's of Foreign Wars-Post 9146, American Legion Post #118, the Cohasset Police Association, and the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. Rain date will be on Saturday, March 27, at noon, Deer Hill School Field.

'Coping with Cancer' program

Wednesday, March 10, at 7:30 p.m., at the Minot Lightkeepers' Residence on Government Island in Cohasset, the Social Service League and the Cohasset Board of Health will offer a program, "Coping With Cancer," facilitated by Lisa Meehan, R.N., B.S.N., O.C.N., oncology nurse with Harbor Medical Associates in Weymouth.

Patients and families will discuss issues surrounding the diagnosis of cancer and its treatment. The program is free of charge and open to the public.

For more information, call the Social Service League office at (781) 383-0771 or 383-0821.

Quilt show and luncheon at Second Congregational Church

Saturday, March 6, will be the date spring comes to bloom at the Second Congregational Church with a display of 50 handmade quilts and a luncheon featuring a choice of shrimp, ham or vegetable soufflé, salad, rolls and an elaborate, homemade, assortment of desserts. The quilt display is from 10:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and the luncheon is from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. The cost is $8 in advance or $10 at the door. A limited number of tickets are available. For tickets, send check payable to Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025 or stop by the church office weekdays between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. For more information, call (781) 383-0345.

The show will benefit the Pediatric AIDS Charitable Trust and the Reach Out and Read Program, both at the Boston Medical Center.

Deer Hill drop-off, a safety concern

Pupils put at risk

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

School officials think they have a $50K stopgap solution to a safety headache at the Deer Hill School.

Plans are to separate school buses and parents-in-cars by creating a new school bus access to Deer Hill through an existing school driveway on Sohier Street to the west of the school.

This way the school buses heading to Deer Hill would not share the access with parents rushing to the new Osgood School to get in line to drop off or pick up their children.

What's happening now is that some parents are flouting traffic rules by passing school buses unloading or loading Deer Hill pupils at that school. Deer Hill starts and dismisses before Osgood. But some Osgood parents arriving early to pick up or drop off their kids won't wait in line behind the buses, opting instead to pass the stationary school buses that have their lights on, a violation of the law.

School building committee chairman Robert Spofford said he didn't see a solution to the problem other than rerouting buses to eliminate

Water tank almost a done deal

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The water commission is closing in on a deal with J. Michael Susi and Sons that will allow the town to build a new water tank on Scituate Hill. That's the latest word from Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr.

"Basically, we're haggling over the price of the land and a construction easement," McNabb said. "It's taking a long time because we've been looking for ways to avoid legal fees."

Susi owns the land that the water commission plans to use for a new 1.8 million gallon steel water tank. The water commission needs 1/2-acre of land to build the new tank. Until last month, members of the water commission had planned to seize the land by eminent domain to build the new tank. But, McNabb said, the water commissioners preferred a solution that avoided eminent domain proceedings and the prospect of a lawsuit.

Towns can take land by eminent domain for public use as long as the owner is paid fair market value for the property. Landowners cannot block eminent domain proceedings, but they can sue for additional compensation if they dis-

Fire dept. call backs drive OT

By Constance Pittman Lindner

Selectmen and the town manager continue to grapple with overtime costs at the fire department.

Town manager Mark Haddad wants to ensure that future overtime budgets would not be as high and suggested that the current procedure of calling in replacements when two firefighters are on an ambulance run be eliminated.

An overtime reserve was originally $118,602 for this fiscal year, but $40,000 more was added on at the October special town meeting. Voters will consider a request for $30,000 more at the March 27 town meeting.

Callbacks account for 23 percent of this year's overtime budget, as it requires two firefighters to fill in for two hours whenever

CHS fitness center opens to public

250 residents showed interest

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

It was always in the plans to open the high school fitness center to the public, school health education coordinator Mike Gill said.

"Many that donated did so with the idea that we would open it up and we'd like to make it available to the town through the recreation department," he said.

"At no time will our students be excluded and they can use the facility free of charge."
— health education coordinator Mike Gill

Operation of the fitness center could be self-sufficient if enough residents pay $15 a month to use the facility. An estimated 125 members are needed to sustain the salaries of the monitors and to pay for maintenance of the equipment that includes treadmills, stair climbers, rowing machines and free weights.

The money would be deposited in a separate account at town hall and would be used to pay salaries of monitors and to purchase or maintain exercise equipment.

That was the news that Gill and recreation department director Jack Worley shared with the school committee last week.

As it stands now, students and student-athletes during and after school use the high school fitness center. College students, who are paid with the money from a grant, monitor the

Police have new Web site

The Cohasset Police Department has entered the information age by launching its own computer Web site.

Police Chief Brian Noonan praised dispatcher David Weeks and patrolmen William Quigley and Richard Yocum for their "diligent efforts in creating this new site, which is growing daily."

The site, which can be reached at www.cohassetpd.org, includes information on police bike patrols, safety films, marine patrols, animal control, PALS (the police-school partnership) and TIPS (the new drug tip line) to name a few. It also includes practical advice and safety tips on when to call 9-1-1, thin ice and "why did you stop me?" on reasons why police make traffic stops.

Protect your car against theft

Police Chief Brian W. Noonan said the department received a $675 grant from the state Executive Office of Public Safety for "Watch Your Car Program," which assists local police in protecting vehicles against theft. Any resident requesting information on this program should contact Safety Officer Richard Yocum between the hours of 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. at 383-1055 or at the new CPD Web site at www.cohassetpd.org.

Traffic citations issued

Last month, Cohasset police issued 186 traffic citations for fines totaling $5,420. The department also issued 25 parking tickets in February for total fines of $435, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

Assessments for Vo-Tech

Cohasset will likely pay $86,079 to the South Shore Regional School District next year. That's a 13 percent drop from this year's assessment of $99,072, according to Robert J. Kelly, Jr., regional school district treasurer.

Kelley cautioned that the assessment is based upon preliminary estimates and could change if the proposed state budget is changed.

Town assessments are based on the number of students enrolled from that town in the prior year. Cohasset is one of eight towns in the regional school district that consists of South Shore Regional Vocational High School in Hanover.

One-day liquor licenses issued

Selectmen issued three, one-day liquor licenses to First Parish Church for its production of Cabaret from 6 to 11 p.m., March 20 and from 2 to 5 p.m., March 21; and for a fund-raising dinner from 6 to 10 p.m., March 27.

Appointed to registrars

On the recommendation of the Republican Town Committee, selectmen appointed Edythe Ford, 135 Beach St., to the board of registrars this week.

Buckley, Jones remembered

Selectmen recalled the contributions of two notable town citizens who passed away this week.

Selectmen chairman Ronnie McMorris extended condolences to the Buckley family for the passing of Raymond Buckley, an ex-prisoner of war, who served the town's veterans' affairs and elder affairs.

Town employee Constance Jones was remembered by selectman Diane Sullivan as a "great lady, very nice."

Agendas on cable Channel 3

Selectmen announced that the agenda for the board's meeting can be found weekly on cable Channel 3, starting this week.

Medical center slated for former dealership

Bank, restaurant also in the plans

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset's Donald Staszko is turning a vision he has for the 10 acres that he owns off Rt. 3A at the Scituate line into reality.

He's moving ahead with plans to transform the site of the former South Shore Chevy Geo car dealership into a state-of-the-art medical center named after his youngest child, a daughter, Sloane.

A bank and a theme restaurant, probably an Applebees, will flank Sloane Medical, the local developer said.

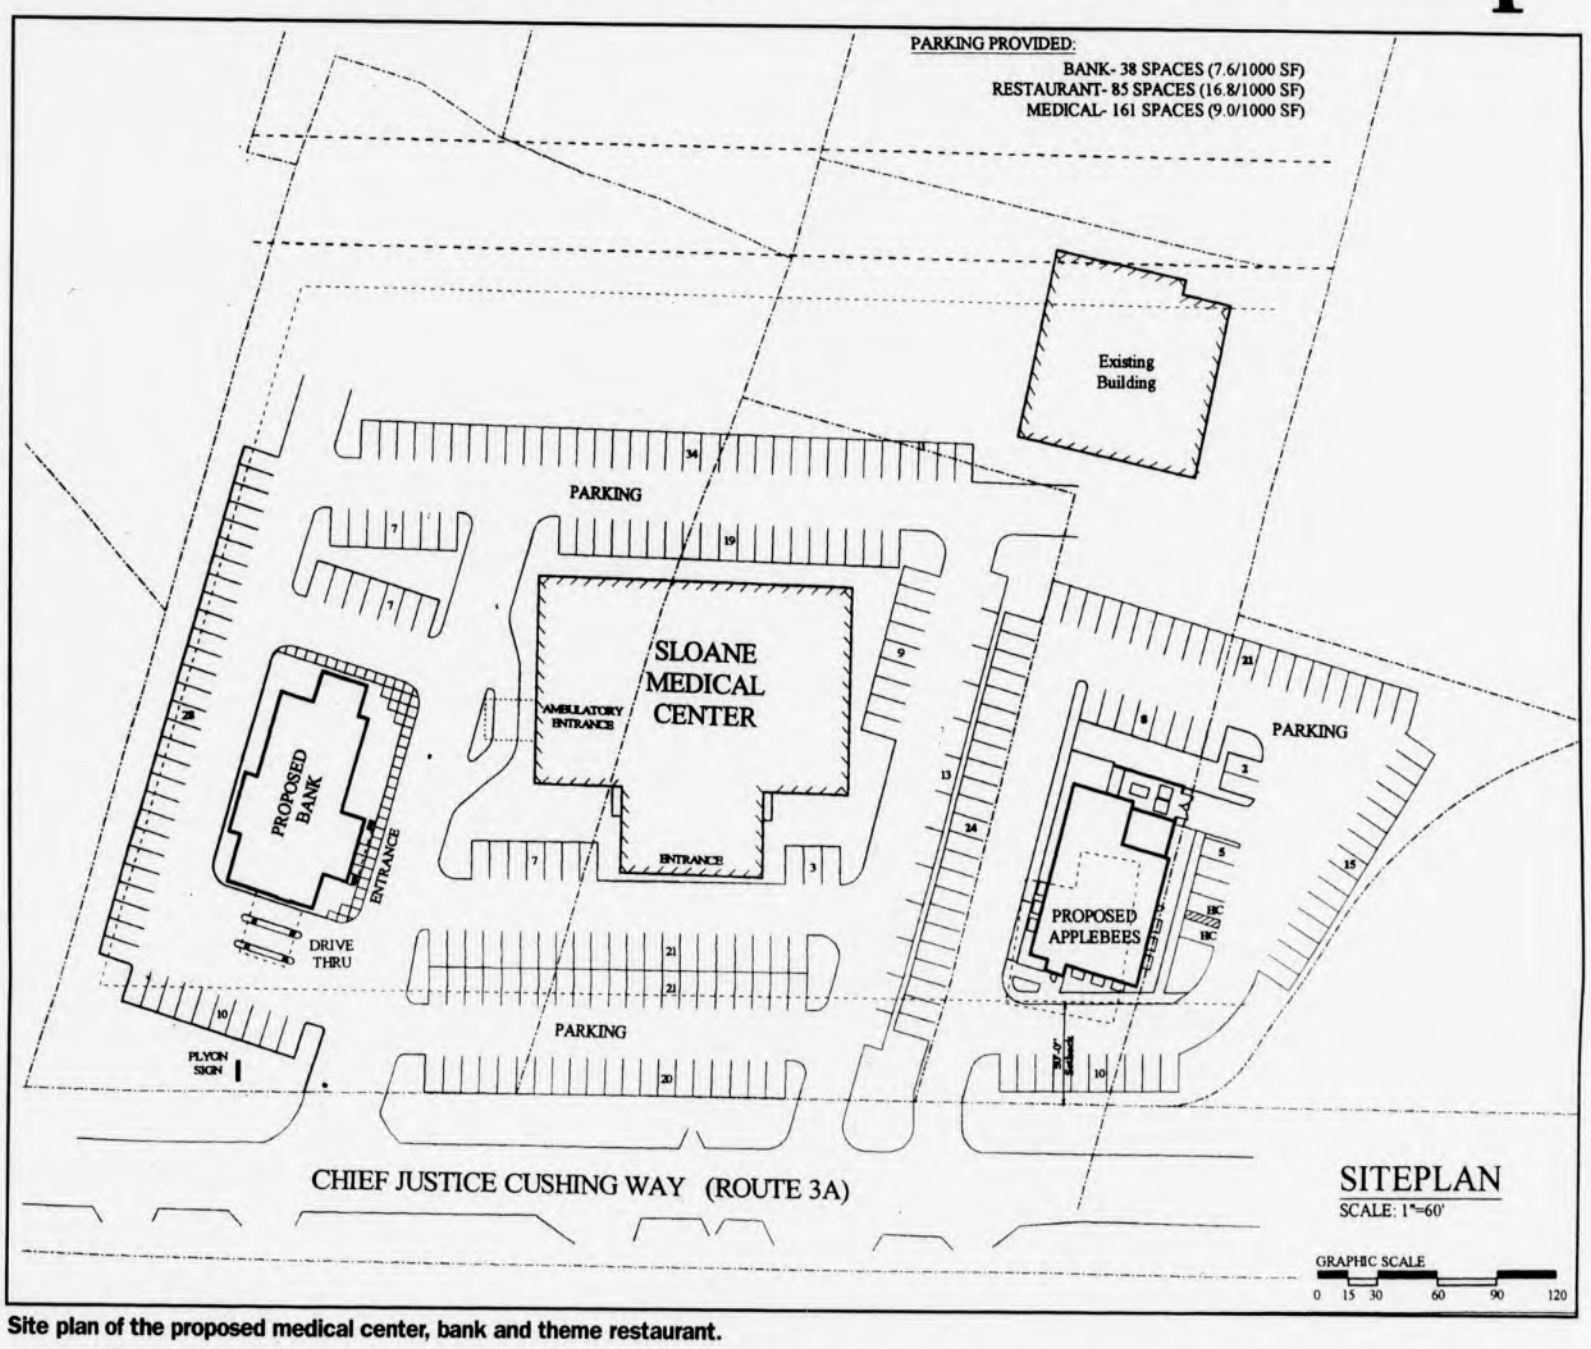
Interviewed at the empty dealership last week, the 33-year Cohasset resident was enthusiastic about what he sees will fill a void in the area.

"I've been hearing from people in the medical community who are looking for space," Staszko said. "There is no major medical space serving our section of the South Shore."

Staszko is talking with HMOs that are in the state but are not in the local area and are interested in establishing a presence here.

"I've been hearing from people in the medical community who are looking for space. There is no major medical space serving our section of the South Shore."

— Donald Staszko, developer



Site plan of the proposed medical center, bank and theme restaurant.

The medical building, which will use the existing footprint of the former dealership, will have 22,000 square feet on two floors. There will be enough space to include an HMO, several groups of physicians, a hospital satellite x-ray center including mammography imaging, laboratory, ambulatory entrance and emergency walk-in service.

A "theme" restaurant, most likely an Applebees, will be constructed to the right of the medical center where the foundation of the old Green Lantern restaurant remains. Applebees, which is based in Kansas City, is a family-style restaurant chain and is the biggest theme chain in the country second only to TGIFridays, Staszko said.

Plans are to build a bank to the left of the medical building. Staszko said he is talking to four banks, none of which are currently in the area.

He said the area will be landscaped to the same standard as Cohasset Plaza — where Super Stop & Shop is located — which his also owns.

Staszko sees the redevelopment of this Rt. 3A acreage as a plus for Cohasset. He estimates the new use of the site would generate about $60,000 a year in tax revenue for the town.

"I like doing positive things," he said.

Staszko anticipates the new medical center will be open by Nov. 1.

He's not bothered by potential competition from another medical building slated for the other end of Rt. 3A on a hill off Crocker Lane near the old golf driving range. Staszko points out his site is more visible and a better location for people from the neighboring towns of Scituate, Marshfield and Norwell.

Wayne Sawchuk, consultant to the development of land for Crocker Realty II, which owns the land where the other medical building is planned, said there is enough business for both projects. He expects his facility to draw from Hingham and Hull as well as Cohasset.

"Neither of us is so large that what we do can't be accommodated in the two buildings," Sawchuk said. The medical building off Crocker Lane will have 26,000 square feet of "rentable" space and is slated to open Sept. 1. He said the facility will even include a coffee shop for people in the waiting area.

Jack Buckley needs boathouse volunteers

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Jack Buckley, head of the Cohasset Maritime Institute, will need more volunteers to get the institute's boathouse ready in time for summer rowing.

"We're hoping to have things in place for summer to reestablish the adult rowing program," Buckley told selectmen Tuesday night.

Repairs to the John Warren II surf boat should also be completed by that time. It is now stored at a boathouse in Hull.

Town manager Mark Haddad recently renewed a two-year lease on the institute's boathouse, which selectman Merle Brown thought would be a good time for Buckley to bring selectmen up to date on the progress of the boathouse project.

Buckley said that volunteers, mostly students, have been offering their time to complete the project.

Selectmen designated the non-profit Cohasset Maritime Institute as custodian of the boathouse that sits on the Hagerty property back in 1994, a year after the town purchased the building.

Buckley, who is also a Cohasset High School teacher, offered to renovate the structure so that it could serve as an educational and recreational center with a focus on rowing.

The latest addition to the building is new windows, put in by a professional who volunteered his services. A new door and roof are still needed.

Buckley said that the new roof will be asphalt.

Selectman Merle Brown told Buckley that David Wadsworth, curator for the Cohasset Historical Society, recommended a red roof for historical integrity.

Selectmen Chairman Ronnie McMorris wondered if red asphalt might be more expensive. She also encouraged Buckley to get the project completed.

"Getting help is difficult, but it is looking raggedy," she said.

Buckley said that he would check with Wadsworth on the roof color and price. He also asked to have the word spread that volunteers are needed. Buckley can be reached at the high school at 383-6100.

Footprints lead police to youths

Break-in at Cohasset News

By Mary Ford

Cohasset police were able to literally track down two suspects in a convenience store break-in Saturday night by following their footprints in the snow.

Police responded to an alarm at Cohasset News on Brook Street at about 9:15 p.m. They discovered the front glass door smashed. Further investigation revealed an undetermined quantity of cigarettes was taken, said Patrolman Garrett Hunt.

"At the scene we noticed fresh footprints in the snow and followed those footprints to a residence."
PATROLMAN GARRETT HUNT

"At the scene we noticed fresh footprints in the snow and followed those footprints to a residence," Hunt said. "After a brief investigation and interviews, we made two arrests of two 14-year-old males."

Police would not release the names of the two youths, who are Cohasset residents, because they are juveniles.

The boys were charged with breaking & entering in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony, malicious destruction of property valued at more than $250 (the glass door) and larceny in a building.

Hunt said the boys may have grabbed the cobblestone from the Red Lion Inn construction site, which they used to smash the door.

Officers involved in the investigation and subsequent arrests were Hunt, Det. Greg Lennon and Patrolman Tom DaSilva.

agree with a town's assessment of fair market value for the seized land. That is exactly the scenario the water commission wanted to avoid.

The land for the tank is part of a 62-acre parcel owned by Susi, and slated for residential or commercial development. McNabb said appraisers for the town have placed the land's value at $65,000 per acre. The water commission needs 1/2-acre, which should cost the town $32,500 if Susi agrees on the appraised value, McNabb said.

The town also needs an additional 1/2-acre for a water pipe and access road. The 30-foot-wide road would sit directly over the pipe. In a separate deal, the water commissioners are negotiating with Paul Barry to place the access road on an adjacent parcel of land that he owns through the Crocker II Realty Trust. McNabb said that Barry has offered to give the town the land for the road in exchange for two connection stubs to the water pipe.

"The only issue we have with Barry is the proposed route of the pipe," McNabb said. "The pipe route crosses two existing easements for sewer. It may be a matter of the depth of the pipe."

The water commission also needs a temporary construction easement to build the tank. McNabb said Susi does not want the town to have a temporary easement across his land. McNabb said there is a possibility that Barry will permit the town to have the temporary easement across his land.

Last month, the water commission reversed its prior decision to take the land by eminent domain when it struck a deal with Susi to purchase the property and share future antenna rights for the top of the tank. The water commission is waiting for Susi to either accept the offer of $32,500 for the 1/2-acre, or perhaps come back with a counter-offer. Attorneys for Susi and the town are working out the details of the purchase and the joint-antenna rights.

"We're almost there," McNabb said. "It will probably take two-to-three weeks to do the paperwork."

If the deal is finalized quickly, the water commission could build the new tank by sometime late in 2000.

The water commission estimates the cost of building the 1.8 million gallon steel tank at about $1.065 million, although the cost of could be even lower as companies bid on the project. The tank would be 65 feet high and 70 feet in diameter. The water commission currently has $1.6 million set aside for the tank. McNabb said the savings from the proposed deal could be used to fund other projects and keep water bills from increasing. The water plant needs additional upgrades and the commission needs to continue its project to clean and re-line existing pipes, McNabb said.

buses and parents "coinciding."

"The reality is that it is a shame to drop $50,000 to reconfigure a driveway when that money could be put into a custodian or something else at the school," he said.

But the bottom-line it that a child could get hurt under the current situation.

"We don't want to be responsible for some child being hit by an irresponsible parent. I would feel terrible personally," Spofford said.

According to police, some parents are acting irresponsibly.

"It's still a problem," said Safety Officer Rick Yocum. "Just last week we had a report of someone running a school bus while it was loading at Deer Hill."

He explained that school bus drivers jot down the license plate numbers of the offending drivers and contact the police. Yocum said he's written letters to those drivers. Police plan to issue written warnings and start writing citations, which carry $200 fines.

With the new configuration, Deer Hill buses would enter the west driveway and drop pupils off at the side of the school where there is a walkway. The buses would then proceed over a proposed new blacktop area to exit out the existing joint driveway.

The $50K for the reconfiguration is included in a $244K article on the March 27 town meeting warrant that also asks for money to finish the air conditioning at Osgood and for some drainage repairs.

Spofford said the reconfiguration is a temporary solution to the traffic problem.

The building committee commissioned an engineering report to look at the traffic circulation at the Deer Hill and Osgood that the school committee took up last week. The report suggested a major reconfiguration that would cost $325K including expanded parking areas, new sections of roads and a new circulation loop at Osgood.

But the school and building committees dismissed the plans as too expensive. Voters at the town meeting in the fall will be asked for the go ahead with construction documents to completely renovate the Deer Hill and middle-high schools, projects that could receive 60 percent reimbursement by the state. Redesign of the traffic pattern for Deer Hill and Osgood would be part of that project.

"Clearly it's not the best design and it needs to be reconfigured," Spofford said. "But is this time? It's better to load it into the Deer Hill project."

EXPECTANT RESPONSES

According to research at the University of Wisconsin on bed rest and pregnancy, there is seldom any benefit in bed rest for pregnant women (with the possible exception of women with an incompetent cervix). Doctors, however, prescribe bed rest for one in five pregnant women. As a result, many experience such side effects as muscle atrophy, weight loss, headaches, dizziness, fatigue, depression, and anxiety. As an alternative, chiropractic care for expectant mothers ensures that the spinal column, pelvis, and related structures are balanced, free moving, and free of vertebral subluxations. This is done in recognition of the fact that pregnant women undergo many structural and hormonal changes that affect the spine, nerves, joints, ligaments, connective tissues, center of gravity, and stability.

Pregnancy is a natural condition and should be no more difficult than any other phase of life. There is no need for you to drag through your term of pregnancy like a prisoner shackled by discomfort, worries, and poor health. Visting a Doctor of Chiropractic will help assure you. Could you, or anyone you know, benefit from safe and gentle chiropractic care? At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we're currently accepting new patients and invite you to call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor. Our "Mothers Morning Out" program can help improve your families natural immunity and save thousands of dollars a year on medical expenses.

P.S. Chiropractic care can also help post partum mothers return to pre-pregnancy normalcy by balancing their spinal columns, realigning pelvic bones, and removing vertebral subluxations.

after-school hours, Gill explained.

However, in order to keep the center going when school isn't in session, a new source of funding is needed.

Worley said a telephone survey of about 100 calls last fall revealed that 250 residents said they would use the facility if it were available to the public at a small monthly fee.

"The idea would be to keep it for Cohasset residents but if the numbers weren't there, that would be another issue," Worley said.

Gill stressed that access to the center for high school kids won't change.

"At no time will our students be excluded and they can use the facility free of charge," Gill said.

He said the recreation department would run the fitness center in non-school hours.

"We are really turning this over to the recreation department the same way we allow youth programs to use our gym and playing fields," Gill explained.

He and Worley would agree on the staff and Gill would have input in the training of staff, Gill said.

Plans are for the fitness center to be open to the public from about 2 to 9 p.m. during the week and from about 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturdays starting March 29.

Gill said the membership price is low because the facility cannot compete with its private counterparts.

"There are no showers and at times there will be 40 football players in there and we're not kicking them out," he said. "We have our suspicions whether or not this is going to work out.

"But it is a wonderful facility for the middle/high school to have and we'd like to open it up to the public," Gill said.

Worley said judging from inquiries at the rec. department office, he thinks the fitness center will attract residents who like its convenience.

"Having something close buy and relatively affordable is 90 percent of the game," he said. "We're not trying to compete with private gyms."

About $30,000 raised privately, some money from the school budget that would otherwise have gone to volleyballs and footballs, and donated exercise equipment have made the two-year old fitness center possible, Gill said.

He explained that the center came about in an effort to change the face of physical education in Cohasset.

"We like to see the kids get involved in something they can carry over into the rest of their lives," he said. "Overall, the fitness center has been a tremendous boost to our physical education program."

The school committee gave the plan to let the rec. department run the fitness center provisional approval for one year.

The fitness center is covered by the town's insurance, Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said.

Annual Easter Egg Hunt

The Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct the 23rd annual Easter Egg Hunt, for children 3 thru 11 years of age, on Saturday, March 20, at noon, Deer Hill School Field.

This year there is again the distinct possibility that the Easter Bunny and helpers will be on hand.

Children will be divided into 3 separate chronological groups: Group 1, ages 3+4(with parent), Group 2 ages 5-7, Group 3, ages 8-11

Please gather around your designated area sign before noon. Bring a small paper bag or container for your candy.

Individually wrapped chocolate eggs will be scattered about the designated areas. In each group some of the eggs will be wrapped with masking tape that will have a number on the tape. Should you find one of the numbered eggs, hold on to it as you will receive a prize from the Easter Bunny.

This year's program sponsors are: Cohasset Rotary Club, Veteran's of Foreign Wars-Post 9146, American Legion Post #118, the Cohasset Police Association, and the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. Rain date will be on Saturday, March 27, at noon, Deer Hill School Field.

GRAND OPENING

1999 SPRING CASUAL AND DRESS

COLLECTION of FIRST QUALITY, DEPARTMENT STORE SAMPLES

Every Winter, every famous brand sends out hundreds salesmen...each carrying the latest Spring creations of the line. They shlep these samples to the big department store buyers, make their pitches, and sell the line.

Once the sales are made, the salesmen are stuck with the samples (which they had to buy) they used to make those sales.

So, naturally, they try to recoup the money they had to spend. The best way for many of them, is to sell those samples to us.

50% OFF THEIR PRICES

YOU'LL SEE 1999 STYLES BEFORE THE BIG STORES DO... AND YOU'LL PAY HALF WHAT THEY GET!

DRESSES
BLOUSES
SLACKS
SKIRTS
BLAZERS SHOES AND KID'S CLOTHING

WHAT ABOUT SELECTION?

It's a GREAT selection: since they're SAMPLES, after all, they're all one and two of a kind. most department stores devote a section to just one brand: at our stores, you'll see a number of different brands in the same space.

You'll see great stuff ...and DIFFERENT stuff at each Building #19 you visit. (We know some customers that make a day of it and visit two or three of ou semi-lovely stores in their quest for the best bargain... the record is 6 in one weekend.)

And while the vast majority of the pieces are for women, you'll see children's fashion's, too(in a great variety of sizes!). (Some stores actually have a few pieces for men.)

WE CAN'T EVEN WHISPER ABOUT THE BRAND NAMES!

"A SAMPLE DEPARTMENT IS GREAT... BUT WHY DON'T YOU GET SIZES FOR the REST OF US?"

You'd be surprised. Sure, lots of the sizes are small...but there's lots of mediums, and you can't always go by the size on the label. (These are samples, after all: 8 or 10 in women's, and 7 or 9 in Juniors)

You've got to try everything on. and you may just find something that fits that doesn't have your size on the label.

Naturally, the big department stores don't want the fashions they've just bought, and are selling at full price, showing up at a dump like Building #19 selling for HALF what they're asking. ...And the BRANDS don't want that either. That's why the salesmen all sell us these great bargains on the QT...They don't want us to broadcast the brands or names of the salesmen that sold them to us. You can see their point.

But you'll see these famous labels in each and every garment!

EVERYTHING (WE HOPE) READY TODAY!

Fire department call backs drive overtime up the ambulance leaves.

Haddad would prefer that the remaining two firefighters carry on alone, or call in mutual aid from Hingham, Hull or Scituate in case of an emergency.

"One thing I think is that when the ambulance goes on a run to the hospital, we don't automatically call two people back," said Haddad. "Another ambulance will come if we have to call for mutual aid."

Selectman Diane Sullivan wondered if that might place too much of a burden on neighboring towns, but selectman Merle Brown didn't think so. "We help them so much now with our ambulance," he said.

Selectman Thomas Callahan reminded Brown that that, too, generates callbacks.

Selectman Nan Roth said, "That's what mutual aid is about."

Lincoln said that the fire department bills money for mutual aid when the town's ambulance provides transport to a hospital. He also said that he was against Haddad's plan.

"I want to say that this is very risky," he said. "I'm very much against it. It's risky for firefighters who have to respond to calls and it's risky for Cohasset citizens. When the ambulance leaves town, that's 50 percent of our staff gone."

Chairman Ronnie McMorris, liaison to the fire department, agreed.

"Merle and I are sympathetic to the department," she said. "I'm opposed (to Haddad's plan). That's a gamble I don't think we should get into taking ever."

Lincoln reminded selectmen that he had written a by-law several years ago that mirrored the police department's by-law about faulty burglar alarms, but it never made it to town meeting.

Brown said that it was supposed to have been made a regulation.

"When we have a call from a designated alarm, four of us come," he said. "Call firefighters and off-duty firefighters may also show. It's a life hazard."

Roth wanted to know how the department would charge for false alarms.

Lincoln said that the police charge a $25 fee with three chances to fix the faulty alarm.

Most of the false alarms come from town buildings.

Haddad said that town hall has a problem with smoke detectors in the building.

"We had four alarms here on Saturday in six hours," said Haddad. "On overtime for this week, 50 percent of it was for this building."

Haddad suggested that buildings such as town hall be removed from the designated box list which includes town buildings, nursing homes and churches.

Ambulance fees are currently set at Medicare rates, but Sullivan thought that charging more for ambulance transport might help raise revenue. She pointed out that many people are covered by private insurance.

Lincoln recalled that in 1981, six firefighters were nearly removed due to Prop. 2 1/2.

"The feeling was that six firefighters could be eliminated," he said. "We met with members of the advisory committee and convinced them that we needed four groups of men.

"At that time, we were all agreed that this was a bare bones minimum for the town of Cohasset to respond to a fire or medical call. We're now below that at 20," he said.

Lincoln also said that he would look into sick leaves and see if he could cut costs there.

The unusually high amount of sick leaves will probably not be a problem with next year's budget, Haddad predicted

Fire Department Capt. Robert Silvia had some encouraging news: call back-related calls have gone down consistently over the past three years.

Tribal Rhythms at Osgood School

Forum on septic system repairs

A public information meeting on the health board's proposed management plan for septic systems will meet at 7 p.m., tonight, in the town hall auditorium.

Copies of the plan can be found at town hall in the health board office and the town clerk's office from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Wednesday; 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m., Thursdays and 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., Fridays.

The proposal, which allows residents to pay the loans back over 20 years through betterments, is on the March 27 town meeting warrant.

After the loans are paid, the town would be responsible for upkeep and operation of the systems. Homeowners would be charged for the town's service.

Also, please note that volunteers are needed. Call Andi Merrill at 383-0687.

MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS WALK

Steve Sinopoli sends all this request:" I will be participating in the annual multiple Sclerosis Walk April 17 in Cohasset. As many of you know, my older sister Sharon was diagnosed with MS about 10 years ago, and I have participated in annual fundraising events since then. Last year I was able to collect more than $1,000 in pledges, and this year I am shooting for more than $2,000. I would greatly appreciate your support of this cause by sponsoring me in this most worthwhile effort. Funds received through the MS Walk support education, advocacy, research and local programs — all that enhance the quality of life for people with MS and their families. If you would like to make a pledge, please make check payable to The National Multiple Sclerosis Society, then send a check to me at the following address: Steve Sinopoli, 570 Commercial St., East Weymouth, MA 02189. All of you who know Steve, or the Sinopoli family, know how dedicated he (they) are: he will do his best, now you do yours!

HETTSTROM FAMILY NEWS

You know, it's about time we talked about the Hettstrom family! First of all, Tara Hettstrom has been five times selected All-League for her work in gymnastics — her dad, Ed, and Mom, Karen, are always with her — every step of the way — in fact, dad, Ed, is a photographer/video filmer of channel 56; Ed has even won a Grammy for his work! And there he is; he films every gymnastic meet. and every CHS wrestling meet. Now folks, this man has been invited to Hollywood — he films Bruins, Red Sox, you name it — and he has helped to put our Cohasset on the map! Thank you, Ed, for devoting so much time to our teams; thanks for your dedication; and thank you for being YOU! We are all blessed, for both you and your wonderful family! OPINION

EDITORIAL

Beware of parent drivers

Some parent drivers are creating a safety hazard for Deer Hill School pupils. Often in their giant SUVs, these thoughtless people are flouting traffic laws by passing stationary school buses that are loading or unloading their precious cargo.

Granted the traffic flow design at the Deer Hill and new Osgood schools is far from ideal.

Robert Spofford, chairman of the school building committee, readily admits that and says it is part of ongoing discussions with the architects of the new Osgood School.

But that aside, there is no excuse for the actions of some parent drivers who are in such a rush to "hurry up and wait" at the Osgood School that they are putting the safety of Deer Hill pupils in jeopardy.

Mr. Spofford says no amount of education on the issue seems to help.

"I take responsibility as chairman of the building committee that the design needs to be reviewed," he said. "Maybe the way the road is being used was underestimated and it is my responsibility to resolve that.

"But I still find it mind boggling that we cannot educate this highly intelligent community to drive responsibly," Mr. Spofford said.

We've heard numerous reports of parent drivers skirting around the school buses, which have their lights on. Others are speeding down the new Osgood driveway pulling onto the grass to pass other cars. When stopped by an officer, some parent drivers have become incensed with the police who are taking the brunt of a problem they did not create.

The solution is to spend $50K to create another bus access to Deer Hill so parents and buses don't "coincide," as Mr. Spofford says.

We urge the school department to move ahead with this stopgap solution with all deliberate speed before someone gets hurt.

But at the same time, we're disheartened that in their busy lives, these parent drivers won't slow down, be patient and follow the rules.

It's time the police started issuing $200 tickets; maybe that will get their attention.

Health board decision, an error

TO THE EDITOR:

I was unable to attend the Board of Health meeting of Tuesday February 23, and while there is usually substantial agreement between board members, such was not the case with regard to the decision to give the new Atlantica Restaurant a smoking waiver for a dining area. I am saddened and disturbed by the recent vote to permit smoking at a location other than the bar area at what promises to be one of Cohasset's premier restaurants and harborside attractions. I have no great antipathy to smoking, and believe that it should be a matter of choice for everyone, but as knowledge of its harmful effects have come with my job on the Board of Health, I am certain that the town should do everything it can to provide disincentives to the proliferation of smoking. It will be very difficult to discourage smoking in the town's dining rooms with the precedent of a smoking waiver in place for a dining room at the Atlantica.

This town has for years, needed a first class seafood restaurant; the best, not just upscale, the tops regardless of price. We've never had that. Such restaurants are almost always non smoking. Now, I'm very afraid that what we'll be getting will be a very nice restaurant with a high quality cuisine but we must go elsewhere to find four star quality.

Actually, one of the biggest surprises to me was that the best table in the restaurant is in the smoking area. This means that Lea and Peter Roy, dedicated non-smokers, and owners of the Atlantica will never sit at its best table.

I will continue to try to work with the Atlantica staff for the smoking dining area to be changed back to non-smoking.

Volunteer drivers appreciated

TO THE EDITOR

I am legally blind and have been wanting to write in appreciation of our valued volunteer van drivers on whom we much depend on for our everyday living.

There are so many great givers of time, patience and caring. They also save the town much in tax dollars.

As a group, the older folk buy medical supplies and patronage the merchants. On a mental note, the drivers may feel the numbers riding are fewer. They are needed even if only one person needs every day services.

The passing of two really committed citizens, Elizabeth Pompeo and Gerrard Keating, brought sad times and a sense of great loss. Always willing and happy to be of service, this is a great loss to both the town and their peers.

Ham Tewksbury, Joe Kelly, Rogers Plante, Mary Sullivan, a young mother will always say, "I have a half a day, what can I do to help you?" Another will say, "Now our shopping is done, where else do you want to go?" A cup of coffee and a goodie is a rare treat.

Most of us shop once a week and we could not possible handle all the housekeeping needs. Shirley Keogh tells us she knows one hour of shopping really means perhaps only 40 minutes and she tells us she knows no one can get a week's supply of home goods in that time. So she is patient and waits. She does not come into the store and treat us like errant kids.

We appreciate our drivers, all of them. If the public could look on these drivers and figure how much they save in salaries and benefits, we might all be surprised. June Hubbard has driven us to the Braintree Mall the first Monday of the month for 25 years. We'd be in rags without her. I feel most residents look on our volunteers as our special fellow citizens. They give love and attention and keep us near to our community and our churches.

We do need more younger faces. We love their presence. They are a blessing to us, to the town, our families.

How happy we feel to see these big smiles and the van. There are many reasons for us to cherish all of them.

Understanding Prop. 2 1/2 overrides

ASK THE ASSESSORS

CHERYL POOLER

As residents contemplate whether or not to support the proposed 2 1/2 override referendum at the polls on April 10, the Assessors would like to take this opportunity to examine the basic provisions that make up Proposition 2 1/2.

Proposition 2 1/2 was adopted in 1980. This important piece of legislation revolutionized property tax administration. Yet, even today, there is some confusion regarding particular aspects of the law and the built-in mechanisms, which allow a city, or town to override Prop. 2 1/2.

The property tax levy (also known as the Levy) is the revenue a city or town raises through real estate and personal property taxes. Prop. 2 1/2 places constraints on the amount of levy a city or town can rise each year. First, a community cannot levy more than 2.5 percent of the total valuation of the town. This is known as the Levy Ceiling. Second, a community's levy is also constrained in that it can only increase by a certain amount in a given year. This is known as the Levy Limit. In calculating the levy limit, we take last year's levy limit times 2 1/2 percent and add to that limit certified growth. The mechanism provided within Prop. 2 1/2 which allows a community to permanently increase its levy limit is the override. The override amount becomes part of the levy limit base in the following year's calculations. The other option available to a community is the Debt Exclusion. The amount of the exclusion does not become a permanent part of the levy limit base calculation, but allows a community to access taxes for a certain period of time depending on how a project is funded.

With the methodology explained, we can now focus on the fiscal facts and the historical trends within the town. In analyzing the Recap, which is submitted to the Department of Revenue each year, figures show, from 1994 through 1999, the towns operating budget has increased by approximately 5 percent per year. This is why every couple of years, the town ponders the question whether to approve or disapprove an override or debt exclusion.

When 2 1/2 was first proposed, these mechanisms were put in place to provide an option for communities to override the constraints of raising the levy limit by only 2 1/2 percent. In fact, a community may override it its levy ceiling.

Within the commonwealth, Fiscal Year 1991 experienced the most override activity with 100 communities voting to increase their levy limits through overrides. That trend has slowed considerably due to increases in state aid and booming economy. State statistics also indicate that analyzing overrides by population shows that communities with smaller populations have attempted to pass more overrides then heavier populated towns or cities. The reason being smaller populated communities have smaller tax bases to draw from, along with less state aid compared to their big brother counter parts.

Operations manager position would pay for itself

THE WAY I SEE IT

JOE MCELROY

Part V: Penny wise and pound foolish

Long, long ago, when life was simpler; the Cohasset School District employed a full-time business manager whose position fell victim to cost-cutting.

Changes mandated by the Education Reform Act (1993) and other considerations, make it essential that the job be re-established. It would be preferable to broaden its scope and designate it as "Operations Manager." If school maintenance responsibility is put under the DPW, I do not believe that would obviate the need for the position. The Superintendent and Principals have more than enough to do without being saddled with "operations" duties. It is not their forte. They do not like it. They do not do it very well. Their pay scales exceed the job responsibilities and their talents would be better spent addressing the needs of students and staff.

Last year, Steve Hart helped me survey several neighboring school districts and they all had such a position. The Operations Manager could supervise the business office, transportation, food service and custodial functions as well as associated personnel. He would be the School District's "go to" person for coordinating maintenance support even if the DPW assumes a larger role. Responsibilities might include budget preparation and tracking, long-range facilities and financial planning, accounting, payroll, student activity accounts, supervisory evaluation programs and contract negotiations for non-instructional personnel. Control of playing fields and recreational facilities, transportation, food service, facilities usage, property accountability, purchasing, safety, statutory compliance with building codes, etc., would be likely additional responsibilities. The Operations Manager would contribute to policy information and compliance with applicable statutes, It's possible that he could support the technology infrastructure and also do grant proposals. Pay ranges in neighboring communities vary from $65-75,000. I'm positive that a smaller system like Cohasset could establish a pay scale of $55-65,000 and get well-qualified applicants. Other than inflation indexed increases, the position compensation should remain within the value range. It is possible that an existing position could be upgraded and "competed" to find the best-qualified candidate. The incremental cost would be $15-20,000.

The need for this position is obvious. The scope of last year's operational school audit was very limited. Nevertheless, it highlighted significant operational deficiencies in the areas of contracting, handling of cash receipts, policies and procedures, job descriptions, property accountability and management of student activity accounts as well as the school lunch program. Little progress has been made to correct deficiencies noted in the audit. This is totally unacceptable. An outside auditor should look into areas not addressed last year and do a follow-up to assure correction of deficiencies already identified.

I am passionate in my belief that hiring a GOOD operations manager is a "win-win" outcome for the superintendent, principals, teachers, students, parents and taxpayers. I have seen numerous opportunities for an operations manager to improve the academic environment, provide safe and attractive working conditions, eliminate waste and take advantage of alternative funding sources. The position will pay for itself many fold.

HEALTH NOTES

Little Harbor Study to get more funding

A newsletter created by a volunteer staff issued periodically by the Board of Health.

The Cohasset Lobster Lab (CLLI) has just received information that they have been awarded a $10,000 grant to provide support to teachers and students who will be working this summer on the Little Harbor Water Quality Study.

The purpose of this grant is to engage citizens within the South Coastal watershed to become concerned about issues of encroaching pollution and concomitants to expanded growth within the area. The approach will be to train youthful volunteers, children of the above mentioned citizens, to develop unique tools to gather and assess data, utilize, and deploy the information developed throughout the watershed.

Community outreach and education is crucial to the success of any planning initiative. The partners and stakeholders in this activity will work with the newly created education outreach subcommittee of the South Coastal Team to create an effective link with the region's schools and educational institutions. In cooperation with the area's High Schools, the students enrolled in the CLLI research program will collect water quality data similar to past work by the Gulf Association, stakeholder in this work. Initially, the activity will center around Little Harbor as a part of Cohasset's DEP mandated Little Harbor Study. Award for this work has been made, and the principal hydrologist employed by the contractor is a part of the South Coastal team working with others in the watershed. Training for this activity will be supported by the DEP, Mass Coastal Zone Management, MassGIS, and Mass Division of Marine Fisheries who have already made such a commitment through the UMASS Extension South Coastal Coordinator.

The Visiting Nurse Association (VNA)

The Board of health works closely with many different kinds of organizations in eastern Massachusetts. One important resource for those who are going home from a hospital or have medical needs not necessarily sufficiently great for a doctor may want to consider the VNA.

The South Shore VNA is a not-for-profit home health organization with a legacy of serving the South Shore since 1911. As the Home and Community Services Division of South Shore Hospital, they serve communities in Metro South, South Shore, and Greater Plymouth areas.

- VNA services are available 24 hours a day, 7 days a week including holidays.
- Office hours are Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., but the VNA may be reached 24 hours a day.
- The VNA provides skilled nursing care, physical therapy, occupational therapy, speech therapy, medical social work and home health aide services. Their Hospice program provides skilled care, support and bereavement services to terminally ill patients and their families. Home & Health Resources offers private duty nursing, homemakers, and personal care support on a fee-for-service basis.
- The VNA will serve everyone who needs their services without regard to race, creed, religion, nationality, gender or ability to pay. Hundreds of individuals, foundations and businesses generously underwrite the significant amount of uncompensated care the VNA provides each year.

Lucrative career ahead for Monica

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

She may have unburdened her soul totally to Barbara Walters but something tells me we haven't heard the last of Monica Lewinsky, whose 15 minutes of fame may yet blossom into a lucrative career.

The day after she cried and giggled on cue for Baba, her memoir of the affair, "Monica's Story," hit the bookstores and an Internet company that keeps track of such things reported it to be the No. 1 best seller - before it was published!

Next, I suppose, will be the remaking of "Monica's Story" as a major motion picture, starring Julia Roberts as Monica, Robert Duvall as Ken Starr and the President, played by Tom Cruise. A nationwide search will be conducted for the actress to portray Linda Tripp.

True, it was not Monica who wrote it but one Andrew Morton, best known for his biography of the late Princess Diana, which adds a little class to an otherwise tawdry little affair. Diana and Monica; would you believe it?

No one will say how much the President's former girl-toy will pocket out the book sales but the publisher, St. Martin's Press of New York, expects the first printing of 400,000 copies to sell quickly.

With that first interview and the kiss-and-tell book behind her, Monica was off to England to hype "Monica's Story," and, incidentally, pick up a check for $600,000 for a Channel Four interview.

"We are not normally in the business of paying for interviews," said a spokesman for the channel. "but this is a unique event in television history. This is a major piece of television history we have here."

Channel Four has already sold the rights to the interview to 30 markets in Europe, Australia, New Zealand, Brazil and Israel and Monica gets 70 per cent of the proceeds.

Next, I suppose, will be the remaking of "Monica's Story" as a major motion picture, starring Julia Roberts as Monica, Robert Duvall as Ken Starr and the President, played by Tom Cruise. A nationwide search will be conducted for the actress to portray Linda Tripp.

Not long after that - strike while the iron's hot, eh! - Monica's famed stained blue dress will be sold at auction at Sotheby's for a cool $3 million, exceeding the $2.7 million paid for Mark McGwire's 70th home run ball.

"It's a little bit of history," says the buyer, publisher Larry Flynt "A lot of people have presidential memorabilia but I'll be the only collector to have this momento of the President."

Next on Sothebys' auction list will the the thonged underwear that she flashed the President in what she thought of as a "small, subtle, flirtatious gesture."

Then come Hugh Hefner and Bob Guccione with offers to pose in the altogether for Playboy or Penthouse. "See Monica as Bill saw her!" will be the blurb on the cover to introduce the most fetching model since Jessica Hahn and Gennifer Flowers.

After looking at the proofs of the photographs, Monica will author the "Offical Monica Lewinsky Diet and Exercise Book," recounting how she lost all that weight by giving up late hour snacks from McDonald's with a married man.

By this time, we should be Monica-ed out and Our Heroine will be found at work hosting a radio talk show in Cleveland, ala Dr. Laura, advising the young and impressionable to stay away from married men.

And co-starring in movies with Joey Buttafuoco and John Wayne Bobbitt.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectmen:
Do you think the town should establish an appointed DPW board that would replace the elected water and sewer commissions?

SELECTMAN/ Fred Koed

Establishing a new department for water, sewer and DPW to improve efficiency and promote professional management may be a good idea in the future, but it is not one of the major challenges facing Cohasset today.

Both of these departments are in the middle of complex and technical long-term construction projects. Now is not the time to reorganize if there is little benefit. It is difficult enough to learn the complexities of any of these departments with out having to master them all.

I understood why the proponents of this idea promoted it five years ago when the water distribution issues. However, if we were to join these three departments now, we would end up with a labor force mix of town employees and two different contract service providers and a new layer of bureaucracy. A sure recipe for more complexity.

I prefer the separate "jurisdictions," "powers" and "divisions of labor" we have today. So we know who is responsible and accountable. The water fund, the sewer fund, the general fund and the educational fund, all have purposes that are very distinct and, therefore, should be dedicated for those purposes. I have no problem with the way DPW, water and sewer are structured today. I see my role as a selectman as helping all boards do heir jobs. If I am elected selectman, I will work build consensus between departments.

SELECTMAN/ Ronnie McMorris

The decision to further consolidate the DPW should focus on efficiency of operation and cost effectiveness, not on whether the overseeing board is elected or appointed. Cohasset continues to move forward with centralized, professional management to ensure that delivery of services to residents is optimized. The town manager was a major step. We continue to explore ways to cut costs and maximize responsiveness to residents by focusing operation of the town in one office.

In 1995, Cohasset moved to consolidate the DPW under a superintendent responsible for highways, trees and parks, cemeteries and the RTF. This year selectmen endorsed the creation of a building maintenance division responsible for the cleaning and maintenance of town buildings. Maintenance of town facilities is a priority, and I endorse taking this a step further and have initiated discussions with the school department to transfer responsibility for our school buildings to that division.

I support including water and sewer operations in the DPW. This further consolidation is logical and reflects a trend throughout the state. The department should continue to report directly to the town manager and might be headed by an engineer. The DPW board should be an appointed commission, merging water and sewer commissions as well as cemetery and recycling committees. The DPW board would recommend policy to the elected selectmen and the Town Meeting. While this represents a consolidation of authority, the aim is a continued commitment to providing essential services in the most efficient, cost-effective and responsive way.

SELECTMAN/ Nan Roth

I do not think that the town should establish an appointed DPW board to replace the elected sewer and water commissions. The DPW has been in operation for only a short period of time, and needs to focus on development of functions of current responsibility. Only three years ago in April of 1996, the Highway, Tree and Park and Recycling Transfer Facility combined to become the Department of Public Works, and in May 1997, the DPW moved into its new building on Cedar Street. This year the DPW will add a Maintenance Division to its operations to oversee and improve maintenance of town buildings. School buildings may be included at a future date.

Following the passage of the Town Manager's Act in 1997, the relationship between the elected Sewer and Water Commissions and the town manager had become unclear until last week's court decision which determined that the town manager has authority to award and cancel contracts. With this action in mind the town manager and the town boards need to work cooperatively to give the current system the opportunity to work as smoothly as possible. The elected boards provide check and balances, encourage diversity of opinion and involve many citizens; important features of democracy in action in a small town.

Health board:
Do you support the board of health's new wastewater management plan for septic systems?

HEALTH BOARD/ Robin M. Lawrence

The proposed Town of Cohasset Comprehensive On-site Wastewater Management Plan appears thoroughly researched and offers an innovative means to address the critical issue of wastewater management in Cohasset. The goals of the program are clear and appropriate to the public health function of the board; to wit, protection of water supplies, protection of environmentally sensitive areas, and protection of water resources in the town.

The implementation of a systematic approach for inspection, maintenance and corrective actions to ensure that systems work properly coupled with a financial assistance program financed by the Commonwealth will facilitate the protection of the environment for future generations of Cohasset residents. Participation in the plan is voluntary and would be cost-neutral to the town; property owners partaking of the opportunity would be expected to fully finance the operation of the plan similar to the manner in which a public utility is administered.

I would support the plan given three fundamental characteristics: adequate protection of the environment, voluntary participation and cost-neutrality.

HEALTHBOARD/ Charles H. Sturdy

Although I agree that the Board of Health's proposed Comprehensive On-Site Wastewater Management Plan represents a step in the right direction as compared with the 1997 plan, I do have a number of concerns with the proposed plan, which I can only briefly touch on within the space provided.

While the proposed plan no longer purports to establish an involuntary program of town-managed septic systems, the plan does require that each property owner must provide the Board of Health with evidence "that his wastewaster treatment system presents no health threat to abutters or to the environment" (subsection 2.1.5) in order to elect not to join the town-managed program. Each property owner will still be required to submit to a mandatory inspection within the next seven years. Based on this inspection, the Board of Health will decide which property owners may elect not to join this program under this proposed formulation.

I am troubled both that the property owner carriers the burden of proof and that the articulated standard is so vague given the potential expense involved in participating in the program. Furthermore, property owners who are unable to avoid inclusion in the program appear to surrender indefinitely control over their septic systems and expenses to the town. In my opinion, the town must work toward a plan which afford more reasonable protections for individual property owners in pursuing the common goal of protection the public health.

School committee:
With the projected town deficit, is this the right time to try to bring salaries for experienced teachers up to par with those in neighboring towns?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Betsy Connolly

A pay increase for our experienced teachers is needed to maintain the quality of education in Cohasset. Salaries for teachers in Cohasset start at $27,893. According to the President of the NEA, college graduates in 1998 began employment with salaries averaging $45,000 nationally. It takes 10 years and a Masters degree for a teacher in Cohasset to reach that level. At a time when we are facing teacher shortages and the Massachusetts Department of Education is offering $20,000 signing bonuses for new teachers, we need to realize how fortunate we are to have experienced and dedicated professionals teaching our children. Cohasset teachers work 6-8 hours a day with students and then participate in professional development courses, workshops and curriculum research programs to achieve their certification requirements under Education Reform.

The School Committee has recognized that the pay scale falls short when compared to neighboring towns. Cohasset pays its most experienced Master level teachers $715 less than Hingham, $2,175 less than Hanover and $4,420 less than Norwell. Cohasset Masters +30 level teachers are paid $2,304 less than Hingham, $3,554 less than Hanover and $4,993 less than Norwell teachers. Cohasset Ph.D. educators are paid $5,390 less than Hingham, $3,740 less than Hanover and $5,536 less than the Master +45 top Norwell step.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

An inflationary 3 percent increase is necessary to bring teacher salaries in line with our neighboring communities. Cohasset students scored in the top percentile ranks on the MCAS assessments. Our teachers should be supported, not abandoned during these difficult budget times.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Stephanie Noble

This is the right time to bring salaries for experienced teachers up to par with those in neighboring towns.

As Kathy Ofsthun pointed out in her article for the Mariner on March 4, "Salaries for the most educated and most experienced teachers fall below the average compared with the five communities by which we benchmark ourselves."

This inequity was identified three years ago during teacher contract negotiations and is now being formally addressed in the proposed teachers' contract, nearing completion.

The criteria we use to determine raises should be applied equitably at all levels of the system. This proposed change would do just that.

In the process of acquainting myself with the recent contract negotiations and the system of annual increases and "step" increases that determine the teachers salaries, there appears to be an elephant in the room and no one wishes to acknowledge him. That elephant is excellence. While masters degrees, advanced course work and experience are all important factors in the teaching equation, there is no substitute for excellence; and apparently no reward for it the present system.

For those teachers who take the time and make the effort to obtain advanced degrees and further their understanding of their chosen profession, I commend you. But I am perplexed by a system that assumes that experience and degrees alone can determine a teacher's value.

Next week's questions:

Selectmen:

It has been said that the 30-year-old Benjamin Report makes for little more than interesting conversation over cocktails. What makes you think the town's new master plan won't be another waste of time and money?

Board of Health:

Do you think the town's taking over the sewage treatment facility at 100 Pond Street is a good idea?

School committee:

Due to the size of the school, could there be cost savings in scaling back the number of extracurricular sports offered at the middle/high school?

Responses must be received by 2 p.m., Monday. Answers, which must be limited to 250 words or less, may be faxed to 741-2931 or dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street or the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square at 73 South St. Call 741-2933 with questions.

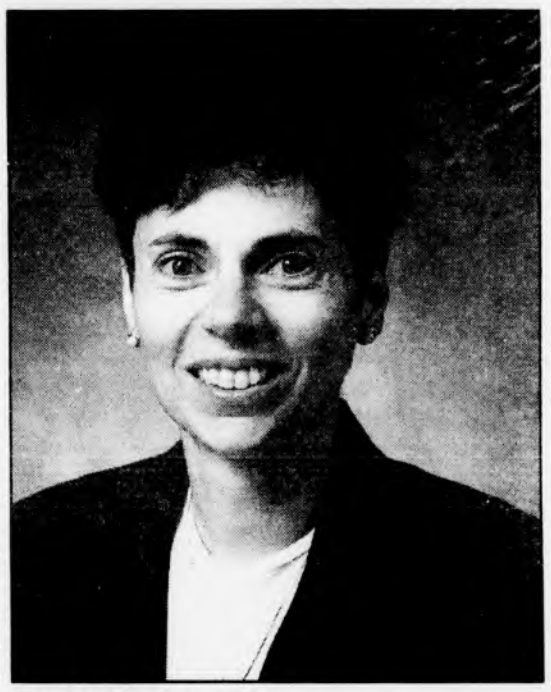
McMorris seeks re-election as selectman



Ronnie McMorris

Roseanne ("Ronnie") McMorris, chairman of the Cohasset Board of Selectmen and resident of 89 Doane St, has announced her candidacy for re-election.

"The residents of Cohasset have given me the opportunity to work on the community's most pressing issues, and I have gained knowledge, insight and experience in the process," said McMorris. "As I examine the progress we have made these three years and the important challenges we still face, I believe I can continue to provide leadership to the town as we work toward achieving our goals."

As a Selectman, McMorris was actively involved in the successful transition to a Town Manager form of government which provides residents with more professional and efficient management. "This," McMorris says, "allows us to turn our efforts to planning. I believe, more strongly than ever, that by developing a unified vision for the Town and a strategy to implement it, we will be best prepared to address future challenges. We have a beautiful and diverse community. I am committed to protecting and preserving those qualities which make Cohasset such a desirable place to live."

McMorris and her husband, David, have four children: Rachel 8, 13-year-old twins, Leah and Sarah; and Karen, 16. Previously, McMorris served as Chairman and member of the Conservation Commission and on the Executive Board of the Parent-School Organization (PSO).

McMorris, an attorney, is trained and certified in mediation. She is a graduate of the New England School of Law and holds a bachelor's degree in political science from the State University of New York at Brockport.

FOR YOUR HEALTH

Spring into easier breathing

By Esther Csapo Rastegari
CORRESPONDENT

Rumor has it that spring is around the corner. Given the recent windfall of snow, that's hard to imagine.

However, come March 21, spring is official. And while some may be dreaming of tulips and crocuses, others are dreading the sight of dust-like pollen floating in the breeze.

The national Centers for Disease Control (CDC) estimate that about 26 million Americans suffer from hay fever, or allergic rhinitis, an allergic reaction characterized by respiratory symptoms such as congestion, runny nose, sneezing, watery eyes, coughing, and itchy eyes, nose, mouth and throat. In an allergic reaction, an otherwise harmless substance—like pollen—is recognized by your sensitized body as an invader.

Each time you come in contact with this invader—the "allergen"—you produce IgE antibodies. With sufficient exposure, you start experiencing the above-mentioned symptoms. For hay fever sufferers, the allergens are usually pollen, molds, dust mites, and animal dander.

While indoor molds, mites and dander are year-round, or "perennial" allergies, pollen is considered seasonal. Pollen allows certain trees, grasses and weeds to reproduce. Trees pollinate primarily in the spring, grasses in the late spring and summer, weeds in the summer and fall—until the first frost.

Pollen is produced by the male structures, becomes airborne, and travels to the female structures. In its airborne journey, it lands on your hair and clothing and on your pet's fur. It comes in contact with your eyes, or is breathed in through your nose. Its fine, dust-like quality allows it easy access to your sensitized body.

How do you know if you are allergic to pollen? If your symptoms start up in the spring and are worse outside rather than indoors, it's possible you have that allergy. Discuss your symptoms with your physician, and consider a visit to an allergist/immunologist (a physician specializing in immune system problems). Your doctor may recommend some testing to confirm the diagnosis.

Testing is usually done either by a skin test or a blood test. In the skin test, the allergen is either injected just under the skin, or placed in liquid form on the skin and then scratched. The area is monitored for redness, swelling, or hives. If there is a reaction, the area will be measured.

The allergist can test for several different allergens by creating a type of "grid" on the skin (usually the back of the arm, or the back). You may be tested for allergens in "groups." For example, people allergic to ragweed are sometimes also allergic to melon.

The national Centers for Disease Control (CDC) estimate that about 26 million Americans suffer from hay fever, or allergic rhinitis, an allergic reaction characterized by respiratory symptoms such as congestion, runny nose, sneezing, watery eyes, coughing, and itchy eyes, nose, mouth and throat.

The blood test is referred to as RAST (radioallergosorbent test). A diagnosis will be made based on test results, symptoms, and history information. Keep a diary of your symptoms, and write down any questions you have to make sure they get covered during the visit.

Questions your doctor will likely ask you include: What are your symptoms? How long have they been going on? Do they recur each year? What makes them worse? What improves them? Do you take medication for these symptoms? If so, what medications (both over-the-counter and prescription)? What other medications do you take?

If you have trouble finding an allergist, you can use the search at http:www.aaaai.org, the web site for the American Academy of Allergy, Asthma & Immunology. They are also a good resource for additional allergy information.

What kind of treatment is available? Treatment for pollen allergy is usually geared at decreasing exposure to the allergen, reducing disruptive symptoms, and possibly reducing your sensitivity.

To decrease your exposure to the pollen:

•During times of high pollen counts, limit time spent outdoors. The following web site gives pollen count information: http://www.aaaai.org. Click on: National Allergy Bureau.

•Keep windows closed during high pollen counts, relying on air conditioners when needed instead of fans.

•Clean the air conditioner filter regularly; replace as needed.

•Consider a HEPA (high energy particulate air) filter system for the home.

•After being outdoors, shower and shampoo to rid your skin and hair of pollen; wash clothing that has been outdoors.

•Remove "outdoor" shoes once inside, to avoid depositing the pollen in the home.

•Since pollen can land on your pet's fur: Wash your hands after contact with your pet; have someone else wash and groom your dog (or use a dust mask); limit the household area available to the pet (in particular, keep the bedroom pet-free).

For relief of allergic rhinitis symptoms, your doctor may suggest prescription or over-the-counter medication. Antihistamines are used to block the effect of histamine. When pollen gets into your system, it encounters mast cells, which recognize it as an invading substance. The mast cells release histamine, which causes the sneezing, runny nose, and itchiness.

A major side effect of antihistamines is drowsiness. This can present problems with work, driving, etc. Some non-sedating antihistamines are available.

For the nasal congestion associated with hay fever, decongestants may be used. They work by constricting blood vessels, which decreases swollen tissues. Decongestants come in both nasal spray and oral form, with the sprays taking effect more rapidly.

One side effect is "rebound"—after a few days of relieving congestion, the congestion increases instead. Stopping the decongestant is necessary to relieve the congestion. Bronchodilators are used, usually in inhaler form, to open up constricted bronchial tubes in the lungs. This helps to decrease coughing, wheezing and shortness of breath.

Agitation may be a side effect. Steroidal medication may be used in oral or inhaler form to decrease inflammation when other medications have been ineffective. Use exceeding one week should be carefully monitored by your physician. If you use medication, either prescription or over-the counter, make sure you understand: how often to take it, whether it is taken with or without food, what the short term and long term side effects are, and how it could interact with other medications you already are taking.

Immunotherapy, or allergy shots, may be used to desensitize you to the pollen. It can be very effective, but can take years of weekly allergy shots. In immunotherapy, a small dose of the offending allergen is injected with a fine, short needle just under the skin. This encourages your body to produce antibodies gradually, eventually strengthening your resistance against the allergen.

After receiving the injection, you will be asked to wait 20 to 30 minutes. Then the site will be checked for signs of redness, swelling or hives. The reddened area will be measured. The next week's dose will be determined by your response this week.

If you are allergic to several types of pollen, you may receive immunotherapy against each type. The solution used can be irritating, and cause itching. While allergic reactions to pollen rarely move into anaphylaxis—a rare, life-threatening systemic allergic reaction—the doctor's office should be equipped to handle such emergencies.

Anaphylaxis may begin with mild symptoms, such as itching, confusion or some coughing, but progresses rapidly into swelling or difficulty breathing, resulting in shock or even death if medical attention is not sought right away. While any allergen can potentially result in anaphylaxis, certain foods (such as peanuts), medications (such as penicillin) or insect stings are the more common culprits.

Are there any other treatments available? The National Institutes of Health's Office of Alternative Medicine is funding research on complementary therapies. One of the research projects (at the University of California at Davis) is the use of "oral immunotherapy"—using a juice of wheat and pollen. The theory is that ingestion of the juice will help the immune system build resistance against the pollen allergen, thus bringing relief to hay fever sufferers. You can read about it at: http://altmed.od.nih.gov/nccam/ To search research articles using alternative therapies, go to the home page - citation index; CAM + Disease.

Cold no problem for rowers

By John Mahoney
CORRESPONDENT

For most people, 30 degree weather during the first weekend in March doesn't really bring the thought of getting out on the water and boating around off of the shores of Hull Gut.

But, for 120 avid rowers last Saturday could not have come soon enough as boating enthusiasts came from as far as New York and Maine to compete in the 19th annual Snow Row.

Rowers competed in the 3 3/4 mile race that has become the second oldest in the country and Hull Lifesaving Museum director Ed McCabe, who is also the race founder, thought that this year's competition was a success.

"Everyone had a good time and it was a very challenging race," McCabe said. "This was our third biggest crowd yet it was still relatively modest."

The race, which was named after Boston Harbor historian and canoeist Edward Rowe Snow of Marshfield, is the first of a number of open water rowing events that our held along the Massachusetts coast through October.

With competitors racing in a variety of boats, the Snow Row has taken on a very unique style and has grown to be the largest event of its kind in the United States.

Although the cold temperature and the storm that was looming that night turned away some people, race organizers and competitors felt that the event went well despite the lower numbers.

"It was a low turnout because a lot of people did not want to tow their boats through the storm on their way home," McCabe said. "I think it was still a success even though we've had bigger races."

"There was kind of cross wind which made it difficult but this was average weather," said Don Ritz of Hull who competed in his 12th Snow Row. "Sometimes it's been so bad we actually raced in the snow but I think that this was a good race."

Official race starter Bill Bradford who is from Hull, agreed. "It was a great turnout considering the weather. But we've had rows with stronger winds so weather wise it's wasn't one of our better ones but we've had worse."

Bradford also added that some of the smaller boats were not allowed to compete because the choppy water tends to swamp the boats that seat less people. But, as the race organizer, McCabe cautioned that safety is always first.

ROWERS, PAGE 16

Cold no problem for rowers

"Because it was a smaller field it was a bit safer and as the organizer I get concerned with safety," he said. "We sent out 120 people and we got all of them back so I think that is a success."

As for the race itself, the Mike Jenness Sr. boat from Plymouth came in first overall with the Port of Boston and the Pilot finishing second and third respectively.

"We usually jump right into it and when you're excited you power up and the boat doesn't go that even ," said Jenness who was on the winning boat. "But this time we kept calm and things went smoothly."

"The conditions are always different but that's what makes it so much fun," said Stefanie Thielman who is from Hull and was on the third place Pilot. "Sometimes it is rough and other times it is as smooth as glass but it was fun."

With the 19th Snow Row going down as a success, McCabe said that everyone is already looking forward to a bigger and better race in 2000.

"It's going to be our 20th and people are already talking about it so it should be a lot of fun."

The Cohasset High girls basketball team finished their season with a break-up dinner at Kimball's By-the-Sea. There were six seniors and three underclassmen on the team this year. The girls thanked coach Hughes and coach Quinn for six years of dedication and hard work.

Scituate Youth Football to hold annual meeting

The number of Scituate-Cohasset Youth Football teams may be increased from three to six under a proposal being considered by the Old Colony Youth Football League of which the Scituate-Cohasset teams are members.

The board of directors of Scituate-Cohasset Youth Football and Cheerleading recently voted in favor of the expansion in order to promote more playing time for players in the Mites, PeeWee and Midget divisions.

The proposal will be discussed during the Scituate-Cohasset Youth Football's mandatory annual meeting to be held Tuesday, March 16, from 7 to 9 p.m. in the meeting room of the Scituate Public Library on Branch Street.

Joe Hughes, president of Scituate-Cohasset Youth Football said officials of the Old Colony League have expressed enthusiasm for the expansion and indicated that the Scituate-Cohasset expansion may be a forerunner of other towns in the league expanding.

"Our program has met with much success over the years and we want it to be more successful by allowing a maximum amount of playing time for the kids who come out to play football. After all, our program is all about the kids," Hughes said.

Hughes urged as many football and cheerleading parents and coaches as possible to attend the March 16 meeting because of the importance it has on the future direction of the local youth football program.

The purpose of the meeting also includes the election of officers and members of the board of directors. The meeting is open to any resident of Scituate and Cohasset including the parents and guardians of current and potential football players and cheerleaders. Anyone is welcome to run for officer or board of directors.

For more information, call Joe Hughes at 834-6504 or any member of the board including Fernando Sousa at 545-5755, Warren Talbot at 545-3906, Gerry Crowley at 545-4733, Dick Cushman at 545-6547, Mike Hayes at 545-2200, Mimi Bonomi at 545-7868, Donna Wright at 545-3695 or Kathy Judge at 545-3705.

Lifesaving Museum rowers appear on PBS documentary

On a beautiful night in April 1998, 25 members of the Hull Lifesaving Museum's Maritime Program participated in the filming of the upcoming PBS documentary, "Saved By Wireless," for the acclaimed series "The American Experience."

Filmed by Ben Loderman Productions, in a segment that required the creation of dense rain and fog on an otherwise crystalline night, museum crews, costumed wig to boot in turn-of-the-century attire, pulled two surf-boats through Hull Gut again and again to recreate the historic first successful sea rescue using the Marconi wireless radio. The rowing boats used in the program, two actual 1930s era Beebe-McLelland surfboats, both reside in Cohasset Harbor.

One is owned by local artisan Mike McNabb of Cohasset, the other, the John Warren II, is the centerpiece of the youth-focused on-the-water education programs of the Cohasset Maritime Institute (CMI). The town of Hull's Fire Department also pitched in, throwing veils of water high over Hull Gut to recreate the driving rainstorm during the rescue. The hour-long documentary tells the story of the 1909 shipwreck during which the White Star Line's Republic, a cruise ship, and the Lloyd Italiano's Florida, carrying European immigrants, collided off the coast of Nantucket, leading to one of the largest sea rescues in history.

Takes issue with O'Malley letter

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter is in response to Mr. Owen O'Malley's letter of March 4 regarding the recent seminar on "Drug Proofing Cohasset" and his opinion that drug education is a waste of time.

It is indeed frustrating for parents and educators to see the problems of substance abuse and other risky behavior getting worse, rather than improving after so much information students have on the subject. But, I do not agree, as Mr. O'Malley suggests, that we should throw in the towel and give up. To do that would admit defeat and the hopelessness of a problem that, after all, is not only our responsibility but one that we control.

Mr. O'Malley, you must realize that the schools did not create the problems of substance abuse, sexual promiscuity, eating disorders or suicide. And, health educators are not ultimately responsible for solving these problems. If you think programs like "Drug Proofing Cohasset" are a waste of time, then you missed the point. What the speaker at Tuesday's program was trying to convey is that schools, churches and the community can influence responsible behavior, but it is ultimately the parents and family who control what children can or cannot do. Programs in the schools and Mike Gill's (Cohasset High School, Health Educator) excellent health education programs can only act to facilitate the information process and help both students and parents understand the complex issues that face teenagers today. School health education programs cannot and should not be seen as a "quick fix" remedy to counter lack of parental concern and control and the overwhelming influences of today's media culture in television and movies. Health education programs and efforts by community, church and police safety programs only fail when parents refuse to acknowledge problems exist, when they refuse to believe substance abuse can happen in their family, or when they are just too busy to be concerned or involved. Or, I guess, when they give up, as you suggest.

Lastly, your comment that "you cannot teach about sex apart from morality" comes close to the truth, but perhaps for the wrong reasons. The fact is any teacher in the humanities cannot teach well without addressing issues of morality, and you are naive to think good schools do otherwise. Everyday Cohasset school children learn from their teachers and by example issues of integrity, responsibility, unselfishness and character. To have any success, these qualities must be introduced by example at home and only reinforced at school. Teaching morality to teenagers as it relates to sex (or stealing, or lying or doing drugs) should be a non-issue to those children where the foundation of morality had been laid many years before by the only people who really matter — their parents.

User friendly Vets Agent needed

TO THE EDITOR:

After reading your recent article in your Feb. 25 issue, I thought I would write and give you my view of the Veterans' Agent. I am a retired Navy Chief Petty Officer, who lives in Cohasset. I have called Cohasset my home since 1953 when my parents bought the house. I am presently living in that same house. It is the home that I enlisted from and during my 30 years of military service called my home of record.

I feel that the Veterans' Agent should be there for all veterans. However from your article, I have the feeling that the Agent is only concerned with the needs of the veterans of World War II and the Korean Police Action. These two military commitments of the United States are not the only commitments. We have other theaters of military actions like Vietnam, the Persian Gulf and military members who were not directly in these actions, but supported our military commitments in other areas. We (veterans) have served proudly in all areas around the world in support of the United States as requirements to protect and preserve the American way of life is needed. It is in this way that we deserve the benefits and help which the Veterans' Agent is there to assist us in receiving.

I do not expect to call a Veterans' Agent at home. As a retired active duty military person, I know how quality time with one's family is of great importance and should not be violated by outside distractions. I believe he should have an office away from his family and their problems. Thus he can pay more attention to the veteran's problem or request without interruption. A designated telephone which I or any other veteran can call without being told that they should call back later because he (Veterans' Agent) is expecting an important personal call or some other family member needs to use the telephone. With computers, telephones, faxes and answering machines, the Veterans' Agent must be available to all veterans or his/her survivors when the need requires him to help in solving the problems or questions that the veteran may have.

I think the Town of Cohasset owes the veterans and their families a proactive Veterans' Agent. They should provide a designated office space with designated office hours and a telephone that is not personal but is designated as the Veterans' Agent's telephone. This would enable the veterans or their families who require his (Veterans' Agent) advise and services to get in touch without feeling that he or she is violating the Agent's home life.

I have not contacted the Veterans' Agent for the Town of Cohasset, because there is no method of contacting him directly without using a home telephone number for him. I could write to him, but then where does the letter go, if I send via the Town Hall. Is the letter opened at Town Hall or is it handed over to the Veterans' Agent unopened? These questions prevent me and possibly others from contacting the Veterans' Agent. I realize that I am utilizing a public function. But at the same time I want what is personal and confidential remain that way. I do not know this when I call a home telephone number or sit in his private home that this will be the case. Thus, I have not contacted him or will endeavor to contact him, until the proper corrective actions have been taken to make the Agent more customer friendly.

I just wanted you to know as a resident of the Town of Cohasset. How I think about an agent who is there but is not there for all veterans who may be looking for his advise and services.

Crowd flocks to CHS forum on drug abuse

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

More than 100 Cohasset parents, educators, law enforcement officials, clergy and other interested members of the community came together in Cohasset High School's cafeteria to address and find ways to reduce risky behaviors in adolescent community members.

Last week's open community forum, "Drug Proofing Cohasset," featured key note speaker Richard Armour, M.Ed., a substance abuse specialist. The March 2 meeting was led by Health Education Coordinator Michael Gill.

"It was very well received. I think that with Richard Armour, we were really able to shift the focus of this whole issue back to homes and families, where we believe the issue really belongs," Gill said.

Part of Gill's work over the years has been distributing surprise "quizzes" about risk behavior to seventh- to 12th-grade students, which he then compares to the national average.

The results of the latest Youth Risk Behavior Surveillance Survey found, for example, that 30 percent of Cohasset High School students reported that in the month preceding the survey, they had gone riding in a car with a driver who had been drinking alcohol, compared to 37 percent nationally. And 39 percent of Cohasset High School students reported using marijuana by age 15.

The questionnaire is part of a bi-annual national survey developed by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention which monitors health-risk behaviors among youth.

Gill has been conducting the surveys nearly every year and has found that Cohasset youth generally exhibit the national norm for propensity of risky behavior.

A federal "Drug-Free Schools" grant paid for speaker Armour's appearance.

Armour spoke for an hour on topics such as 12 steps to drug-proof children, forging communities resilient to drugs and building consensus for community action.

Some of his tips put a new slant on old phrases: "tough love" means both parents and children should give up vices; "it takes a village" means allowing your child to seek out a second opinion from an adult who shares your values and it includes caring for others' children as well as your own; "self-esteem" is about encouraging selfless service rather than self-seeking behavior; and "nurturing the inner child" includes disciplining the child's "outer" behavior.

Besides making the home an oasis, Armour also recommended that parents deal with their own demons—any unresolved issues, compulsions, obsessions, addictions or issues that might make them emotionally unavailable to their children.

Armour's other suggestions included controlling, filtering or "killing" the TV. He explained that even "good TV" makes kids passively programmed and that it's a "market-driven, third-grade intelligence-leveled, passively-received sedative hypnotic."

A list of proposed policies on drug prevention was voted on by participating parents and is recommended to Cohasset parents and residents, ranging from zero-tolerance concerning experimentation with illegal substances to reporting back to parents when a child has been seen involved in dangerous or destructive behavior. (See sidebar.)

A Consensus Among Participating Parents:

A parent's decision as to when a child should drink alcohol should reflect and support the established laws meant to protect children in this community.

Parents should maintain zero-tolerance for any experimentation with illegal substances.

Parents who host gatherings of young people take on a responsibility to the parents of those young people who are their guests. Ground rules and expectations should be determined by the host parents in concert with the parents of all youth attending the gathering.

Any Cohasset parent who witnesses any Cohasset child engaged in dangerous or destructive behavior will consider it his or her reciprocal duty to inform that child's parent(s).

The parents of this community agree to protect each other's kids. They will cooperate with educators, law enforcement professionals, clergy, etc., as a network of caring adults who accept a collective mission to care for and protect all of Cohasset's children.

Response to Haddad's comments

TO THE EDITOR

In response to Town Manager Mark Haddad's comments as quoted in last week's Mariner, the Sewer Commissioners never proposed spending money beyond what Town Meeting had appropriated. To have done so would have been both foolish and illegal.

The Town had sufficient funds to proceed with Contract II, and, if the Commission had been allowed to continue with it, it would have saved the Town over $50,000 and the majority of the Straits Pond ACEC could have been sewered almost a year earlier. Endless hours of informed and professional work were undone by the canceling of Contract II.

In the fall of 1998, the additional funds were approved to complete the construction work, reaffirming that the Commissioners' original decision to proceed was the correct course of action. This would have saved the Town significant time and money.

Child psychologist on parenting teenagers

David Elkind, Ph.D., Tufts University child psychologist and nationally known author of numerous books on child development, including "Parenting Your Teenager," "The Hurried Child" and "All Grown Up and No Place to Go," will speak on "Parenting Teenagers," Wednesday, April 7, 7:30-9 p.m., at Cohasset High School, 143 Pond St.

Dr. Elkind will discuss: the changes in contemporary life that have stressful effects on teenagers; how to maintain communication with your adolescent; administering "Tough Love." According to Elkind, "three changes have had particularly stressful effects upon contemporary youth. One of these is the increased freedom experienced by young people . .. also, young people today experience more loss than did those of earlier generations ... finally, the heavy emphasis on academics makes academic failure much more salient than it ever was before ... young people today are much more concerned with academic failure than with character lapses."

This free program is sponsored by the Cohasset PSO and the Social Service League. Call (781) 383-0771 for more information.

ASP yard sale 'pre-sale'

Highlights of more recent seasons include performances at the Dom Cathedral in Latvia, Holy Trinity Church in New York City, and teaching at the St. Petersburg Conservatory in Russia. He is also author of the "Gregorian Chant Handbook" and is known for his chant workshops. Dr. Guzasky has done extensive research on the organ works of Josef Rheinberger and is a member of the Rheinberger Foundation. He is now preparing for another teaching and recital tour in Russia after Easter. He has studied at Harvard, Millikin University, Northwestern, Eastern Illinois University and completed his formal training with doctoral studies at Boston University.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, is handicapped accessible, and there is plenty of parking in the village lot. A free-will offering will be taken. For information call (781) 383-1083.

Temple hosts 'Shabbat Across America'

On Friday, March 12, members of the South Shore Jewish community will gather at Hingham's Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in an effort to revitalize the weekly traditional Sabbath observance. This is an opportunity for the entire community, members and non-members, to stand side by side and worship together with others across the country in the annual "Shabbat Across America" event. The celebration will begin at 6 p.m. with music, ritual and dinner, followed by a learner's service at 8 p.m.

Conceived and organized by the National Jewish Outreach Program, "Shabbat Across America" represents a united effort by Judaism's four major movements to renew interest in the fourth of the Ten Commandments: observing a weekly day of rest.

More than 75,000 Jews in North America are expected to simultaneously participate and rejoice in a traditional Shabbat service and festive meal. In Hingham, Rabbi Stephen Karol will conduct the traditional Friday night service and explain all rituals to the participants.

Congregation Sha'aray Shalom is located at 1112 Main St. in Hingham. Space is limited, so please call the Temple office at (781) 749-8103 to make a reservation for the event or to obtain more information. The cost is $15 for adults, $6 for children 12 and under and there is a $36 family maximum cost. All fees include a 3 percent donation to Mazon, the Jewish response to hunger.

Tax watchdogs take message to town meeting

Group wants money articles on ballot

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers (CCT), a grass roots group, is trying to change the way the town spends some of its tax money. Members of CCT have placed a citizen's article in the town meeting warrant that would force the town to place all financial articles on the annual election ballot for approval by Cohasset voters. If the article is approved, the taxpayers will have more say in the way their money is spent, said CCT president Leonora Jenkins.

Jenkins briefed the selectmen on the intent of the article at their Feb. 22 board meeting. Jenkins said special interest groups have been dominating financial discussions at town meeting at the expense of all taxpayers. Many residents have difficulty attending town meeting on Saturdays because of family obligations, social commitments, and the hectic pace of life in the late 20th century, Jenkins said. She said special interest groups show up at town meeting en masse to influence the outcome of a particular issue.

Boards split on plaza expansion

Rezoning of parcel needs voter approval

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A local developer could be in for a fight on town meeting floor over rezoning a parcel of land that abuts Cohasset Plaza.

Donald Staszko, who's lived in town 33 years, would like to expand the Super Stop & Shop by about 15,000 square feet and add a 30,000 square foot retail store at the site. But he needs town meeting approval to widen the highway business zone by 200 feet in order to do so.

Three members of the planning board told selectmen Monday; they were opposed to the article.

Planning board chairman Al Moore said zoning ought to have a certain "staying power."

"Zoning ought to have a permanence," he said. "One ought to be able to go to bed at night and not worry that something is going to go in next door."

Other issues concerning the planning board with the proposed plaza expansion were the increasing traffic on Rt. 3A; that more 3A businesses would hurt the village area; and that the town might not like what could end up in a plaza years down the road.

Police get tough at Deer Hill

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Police have stepped up traffic enforcement at the Deer Hill and Osgood schools.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said police issued four speeding tickets Tuesday in the school zone. More citations were written yesterday.

"We are heavily monitoring the comings and goings at Osgood," Jackson said.

Police will also write tickets for any vehicles that pass a school bus with its lights flashing, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. Those tickets carry fines of $200.

"There are other things we can do with $50K. This is absurd because someone won't hand out a few tickets."

— Selectman Tom Callahan

Up until now, police have written letters or issued warnings to drivers who pass school buses, which are either unloading or loading Deer Hill School pupils before or after school.

What's happening is that some parents in a rush to get to the new Osgood School, which is behind the Deer Hill School, are flouting traffic rules by passing the standing school buses. The two schools share a common

PSO holds powwow on budget

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Town manager Mark Haddad and school superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey met with 35 PSO members Tuesday morning in the Deer Hill cafeteria to discuss the town's budget amid growing concern over the upcoming $766K override.

"It's been a difficult year for Cohasset in terms of its operating budget," said Haddad to the audience, which included selectmen chairman Ronnie McMorris, selectman Nan Roth and Deer Hill principal Paul Callahan.

Haddad explained that last year's decision at town meeting to use free cash for town projects has meant that there were no surplus funds available to make up for unforeseen drains on the town's finances this year.

Haddad explained that the town was asking for a 2.7 percent increase in its budget and said that health insurance, solid waste disposal costs and debt service expenditures were the budget busters.

Two clerical staff positions have been eliminated and one full-time and part-time employee has been added to the town's maintenance staff to help with costs.

Haddad said that he is also investigating some long-term payments the town has been

Pay for call firefighters

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln met with representatives of the call firefighters to discuss their pay.

"After reviewing the matter, they have agreed to bring the matter before their association at their next meeting (March 18) for discussion and to develop a recommendation for Roger and I to review," Haddad said.

Haddad said he would bring the issue back before selectmen following the call firefighters' meeting.

Matters under discussion include suggested pay rates for call firefighters of $13 an hour ($14/hour for the call lieutenant) and applying the hourly rate to training sessions and paying the firefighters for work that extends 15 minutes over the last hour worked.

"Although the length of incidents is usually about one hour, a call firefighter who works at least 15 minutes of the last hour worked should be paid as if the call firefighter worked the full hour," Lincoln said in a memo to Haddad.. Provisions for reimbursement for mileage were also requested when call firefighters are required to travel long distances in their private vehicles for training.

Currently the budget for call firefighter service is $30,000 a year. The firefighters, who are compensated once a year, are paid by dividing that figure by the total number of calls responded to.

Upset over Deer Hill traffic

In a March 4 letter to Police Chief Brian Noonan, John M. Gallagher of Ledgewood Drive complained about the safety situation in the Deer Hill School driveway.

"While bringing my child to school, picking her up at school, or conducting business at the school," he wrote. "I have witnessed motor vehicles which seem to be traveling in excess of the posted speed limit, failing to stop for pedestrians crossing the roadway, and passing school buses with red lights flashing stopped to allow students to board or alight."

Gallagher said the violations of state law are of great concern to him.

"Your department is responsible for enforcing the current laws for public safety," he wrote. Gallagher asked the chief to inform him about what measures police are taking "to mitigate the dangerous situation and provide a safe school zone for my child and peace of mind for me at home."

Correction in assessors' column

Do to a typographical error, a sentence in the "Ask the Assessors" column last week on understanding Prop. 2-1/2 overrides may have been confusing.

The sentence should have read: In fact a community may override to its levy ceiling. (A community may not levy more than 2-1/2 percent of the total valuation of the town, this is known as the levy ceiling and creates the top tax rate allowed of $25 per $1,000 of assessed valuation).

Fund for thermal imaging device

Selectman Merle Brown said the Cohasset Call Firefighters have set up a fund for donations to pay for a "thermal imaging" camera. Donations should be sent to the Call Fire Department Assoc., PO Box 251, Cohasset 02025. While selectmen support the need for the device, they say the town cannot afford the $25K to pay for it. They asked the call firefighters to solicit donations to cover at least part of the cost. The device is mounted on a helmet and enables a firefighter to see through thick smoke.

First Parish house set for renovations

Structure holds a rich history

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

It has survived Indian raids, the American Revolution, the Civil War, the abolition of slavery, and two world wars—and now the 275-year-old Unitarian Parish House will be rewarded with restoration work that will bring luster back to its heel-worn, wide-plank floors and architecturally detailed rooms.

The center-chimney Georgian was built in 1722 by and for Cohasset's first minister, Nehemiah Hobart and his bride, Lydia. It was erected directly across from the New England Meeting House on the common, which was the home of the First Parish Unitarian in Cohasset.

The white clapboard house at 23 Main St. held firmly against the ravages of time with timbers that once served as ballast on ships and a powdered-clamshell-and-mud plaster that blocked out summer's heat and winter's frigid winds. Other than the removal of an old wooden fence and the Dutch elms that once graced its front yard, little has changed at the front of the structure which housed three of the parish's ministers in its first 125 years.

Accounts of Indian raids, seafarers lost on the Atlantic and illness fill Hobart's diary and provide evidence of the grimmest aspects of colonial times. During his 18-year ministry, Hobart recorded 116 deaths, 70 of whom were children less than eight-years old. Many of that number were lost in a wave of diphtheria that devastated the town, and cost Hobart the lives of two of his own children.

In 1747, the Rev. John Browne took up residence at 23 North Main St. and preached revolutionary patriotism from his pulpit to rouse the citizens of Cohasset.

A historic visit to Cohasset from John Hancock, the state's first governor, is said to have taken place in the house's parlor.

"There was a woodshed behind where Trueblood Hall is now, just beyond the living room," said David Wadsworth, Cohasset Historical Society curator. That shed was built by Browne's son, Samuel, and it was used as a workshop and store until the early 1800s, when it became the town's first post office.

The third minister to reside at 23 North Main St. began his ministry in the mid-1800s when the separation of church and state was already established and the Meeting House on the common was called the Unitarian church—but greater change was in the air.

Osgood transformed education in Cohasset, putting an end to the use of corporal punishment in town schools. He served as a school committee member for 26 years and was superintendent for 12 years. His legacy to the town's high standard for public education lived on in the old and currently in the new Joseph Osgood Elementary School.

Another change Osgood fought for was the abolishment of slavery. He urged townspeople to sign an anti-slavery petition with him at some point during his 56-year ministry. (He resided in the parish house for 53 of those years.)

More pastoral changes developed in the house's garden, where Osgood mowed hay and cultivated the soil to bring up peach trees, grapes and flowers, all helped along by the honeybees he kept.

In more recent times, the house grew to include a back addition called Trueblood Hall, named in honor of the Rev. Roscoe Trueblood.

The hall was built in the 1960s, along with a kitchen. It was the first large meeting place in Cohasset village, other than town hall, and made possible 40 years of senior citizen luncheons, AA meetings, scout groups, the Red Cross Bloodmobile, the Cohasset Historical Society and The League of Women Voters meetings.

At one time, the hall also housed a public kindergarten while renovation and expansion took place at the old Osgood School.

Since the late 1970s, the Carriage House Nursery School has been in operation in, as it name implies, the carriage house. The parish houses' most recent civic service has been to the 18 homeless families that have been helped back toward independence since the Homeshare apartment upstairs came in use in the late 1970s.

The front rooms' interior have remained little changed over the decades, with its four original fireplaces and 18th century architectural features left untouched. Old, wide-plank floor boards have had the sheen of centuries-old wax worn from them by the many visitors who've traversed them and the shell-shaped custom built-in shelves in the living room, now occupied by the minister's study, still hold china. Narrow bedroom closets upstairs are a reminder of the less varied fashion requirements of past centuries.

In the next parlor on the main floor, in what was once the living room, meetings and small receptions are held.

Besides the homeshare apartment, the upstairs bedrooms have been converted to classrooms and nursery school staff offices.

Updates reflect a bygone era, such as the pewter sconces with electric candles on the walls and a Victorian floral-stripe wallpaper in the living room.

The 1960s additions, however, reflect the time in which they were built so that there is a clear division between the wooden floors and the new kitchen linoleum.

For some visitors, such as Wadsworth, memories fill the halls of the house.

Wadsworth remembers Sunday services across the way, where he sat in the family's 150-year-old pew that dated back to the Nichols family that his mother was descended from.

"In the early 1700s and 1800s, selectmen sold pews and I suppose our ancestors got ours at cut rate because there was a pillar right in the middle of ours," he said. "It wasn't that popular a pew and I used to make sure to sit behind the pillar. It was a beautiful old church, though."

Following services, Wadsworth attended Sunday School where the nursery school is now located and would then repair to the building with fellow students who went to different classrooms for further study.

"I'd hate to tell you how long ago that was!", he joked.

Wadsworth remembers the parish house as a beautiful place with nooks and crannies with secret rooms.

"Behind a chimney upstairs on the second floor, you could pass back and forth between two rooms through a little passageway just under the roof," he said.

Other than the large yellow house at 67 Sohier St., which dates back to 1713, the parish house is the oldest house in town, Wadsworth said. "The Rev. Osgood's daughter and son-in-law, Elizabeth and George Davenport, married in California and built a house there. I got a house a number of years ago from a historical group there that said that the Davenport house, built in the 1870s, was their oldest home and they wanted some background on Elizabeth Osgood Davenport. I couldn't help my one-upmanship and told them that the South main Street home was built in 1722."

Cabaret'99 should raise the roof

First Parish celebrated the Parish House's 275th birthday on Jan. 24 of this year with a gala party following Sunday services. A cake was served, accompanied by a "visit" from Lydia Hobart, Nehemiah's bride. The party also marked the start of a capital campaign at First Parish to raise the money—$750,000 in all—needed to renovate and update Parish House and Trueblood Hall.

The ninth annual musical revue and fundraiser, Cabaret '99, will no doubt help.

Performances are already sold out for the two performances at 8 p.m., March 20 and 4 p.m., March 21.

The shows are preceded by an elegant dessert reception at 7 p.m. and 3 p.m., respectively.

The revues will feature the 'This Old House' theme, in keeping with the renovation plans.

The show will be produced and directed by music director Carolyn Curtis, who will lead the parish's 30-member choir.

The cabarets got their start when Iri Bloomfield and Carolyn Martin of the First Parish Cabaret Committee decided to come up with a fund-raising show.

"We served a supper, which people brought things to, and then we did a little cabaret—we had no idea how much talent we had in our parish!", said Bloomfield.

Cabaret'99 will take place in Trueblood Hall which will be filled with 100 audience members for both performances. A silent auction will also be held in the carriage house.

A January 21 meeting of the Parish Committee endorsed the concept of raising the maximum dollars possible toward the projected need of $750,000 in lieu of setting a fixed dollar goal. They felt that the project could not go forward in its present state without a minimum of $500,000 in gifts.

The project calls for the construction of a new community hall; a kitchen behind Trueblood Hall, the renovation of Trueblood Hall to include two classrooms; an entry hall and gallery and facilities for religious education. Additional space for counseling and administration, a new library and toddler room, and new restrooms will also be addressed. The facilities will be fully handicap-accessible and will also include the replacement of heating and electrical systems.

Estimated Project Costs

Base building construction and renovation cost:	$660,000
Architectural and engineering fees:	66,000
Testing and survey costs:	5,000
Printing and reimbursable costs:	2,000
Total project costs:	733,000

Chamber still wants Independence Building

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

Town manager Mark Haddad is readvertising the Independence Building on South Main Street without a set bid price. That's because the $100,000 minimum last advertised brought no offers. The next bid opening is scheduled for 10 a.m., April 15.

Since the Teen Center moved out of the Independence Building several months ago, the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce has been interested in the building.

The Chamber plan includes leasing out the upstairs and part of the first floor as offices and installing a public restroom on the ground level. But the $100K minimum bid made that plan infeasible.

The lack of takers for the building comes as no surprise to Chamber vice president Dean Rizzo.

"It needs a tremendous amount of work to do anything with it, no matter what you want to do with it," he said.

What Rizzo would like to see done is to have the building used as part of the overall village revitalization plan.

"It was our hope and it still is that the town would lease the building to the Chamber or give it to the Chamber and then the Chamber could take upon itself the role to bring in public restrooms to the town and to the village center and also restore the historic character of the building," he said. "The Chamber is not in a position to actually be able to purchase the building and then spend the amount of dollars that would be needed to restore it."

Rizzo said that the building could be restored in conjunction with the new sidewalk planned for this fall. The Independence Building abuts the new sidewalk and funding for it includes construction of a handicap-accessible ramp into the building.

"It would all be paid for by the sidewalk grant so it's not an extra cost that the town would have to incur," he said. "Ultimately, we'd love to have the building. It will be interesting to see what happens and what kind of bids come in."

Town clock needs work

Rod Hobson of the maintenance committee at First Parish, reminded selectmen this week that the clock on the steeple belongs to the town.

"We were putting together a contract to repair the steeple and it turns out the clock does not belong to First Parish, it belongs to the town," Hobson said. "In any case, there's a lot to be done to it."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said money from the recent sale of fire call boxes could be used to pay for the clock repairs that are estimated at $4,700. The town collected nearly $5,000 through the fire box sale.

Noel Ripley, who is keeper of the town clock, said he didn't think the repairs would cost that much. Ripley said he would talk with the contractor, Christopher Burgess, to get a firm price.

Clock repairs planned include repairing moldings, painting the four dials and applying gold leaf to the clock hands, numerals and minute markers.

Snowy days and Mondays get the DPW down

By Constance Pittman Lindner
STAFF WRITER

As if Mondays aren't hard enough. The fairly uneventful seven inches of snow that descended on Cohasset two weekends ago returned late Sunday night, leaving about seven heavy inches of snow cover in its wake for workday commuters to do battle with.

Paving the way—literally—for motorists was Harold Litchfield, department of public works supervisor, and his "road warriors."

"We went out at 1:45 a.m. Monday morning and were through at 4 p.m.," said Litchfield. "Then, there were a couple of times we went out to clean the snow in the center of town."

The town provides $45,000 for the DPW to rid the town of the white stuff, but this mild winter's snowstorms were lengthy ones, requiring labor intensive treatment.

"I get the same amount each year," said Litchfield. "Last year, we only went out twice scraping. I turned back $11,000 to the town last year. But this year we also had to pay for repairs to the plows and sanders—the money is not just for buying the salt and sand or for the manpower. It's getting to the point next year where the town may have to give us more money. They've dumped more streets on me and prices for sand, salt and labor have gone up."

Litchfield said that he's been overbudget for a while and after this storm, has had to buy a load of salt and three loads of sand.

"That adds on about $1,400 more," he explained. "This snow season's expenses are due to the way the snow came about. It kept going in dribs and drabs. If we could have even a foot of snow at once it wouldn't be a problem—we could take care of it at once and it would be a lot cheaper. It's sending the men back out again that costs. We've been out 29 times this season, between sanding and plowing and plowing and sanding."

Town manager Mark Haddad said that there are new subdivision roads that have added on to the DPW's workload. "That's the nature of the beast," he said. "This year for some reason, all of a sudden, every Friday we seem to get a snowstorm, poor Harold. The deficit keeps growing and with this last storm, I'm sure it's up in the high $20,000s by now. Personally, I've had my fill of snow and I don't want to see anymore."

"This snow season's expenses are due to the way the snow came about. It kept going in dribs and drabs."
— Harold Litchfield, DPW superintendent

Under state law, towns are allowed to overspend their snow budgets but the deficit must be made up before the town sets the tax rate for the next fiscal year. Town Accountant Michael Buckley said the money can come from the reserve fund or from free cash appropriated at the fall town meeting.

Not so the students of Cohasset who have racked up four days of snow-filled slacking.

On a less sunny note, those missed days will have to be tacked on to the end of the school year to make up for the snow days so far.

As is the custom, Litchfield and school superintendent Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey are on the phone about 4:30 a.m., discussing the feasibility of holding classes later in the morning.

Malvey bases his decisions on whether Litchfield's crews can clear the roads and school walkways in time for the morning trek to school, and he also checks with local superintendents on their decision.

"School was closed because the snow started only several hours before school hours," said Litchfield. "We started sanding 1:45 in the morning and we were only able to put the plows on the road at 5 a.m."

Some motorists who had to venture out found themselves off the road.

"We had a couple of 'slide-offs,'" said safety officer Rick Yocum. "We had one slide-off that hit a tree, but no injuries. I know a few people slid. One man called to say he'd slid to a fence at Beach and the ball park. He just called down to tell us he did it, but there were no personal injuries in that case, either. There were a few tree limbs down here and there, but nothing major. All in all, it was pretty uneventful."

Tax watchdogs take message to town meeting

According to CCT, special interest groups have forced the town into this year's dilemma in which an operational override is needed to balance the budget.

"Who are the people who can't come to town meeting on Saturdays?" Jenkins asked. "They're parents who have to drive their children to sporting events; they're parents with young children; they're people with family obligations. We have to come to grips with changes in our society. We used to be an agrarian society, but now we're mobile. Families that used to be centered in one area now have members living in other parts of the country."

The selectmen voted to defer the article to town meeting for consideration. Selectman Merle Brown said he thought the article was a good idea because he's been to many town meetings where people stay around to vote on one article, then leave. Selectman Chairman Ronnie McMorris said she believed the town needed to find a way to attract more voters to town meeting. She suggested representative town meeting as a possible solution. Selectman Tom Callahan said the CCT article might not provide voters with more information. He said it's possible voters would show up at polling places on election day knowing nothing about the financial articles they were voting on.

"Town meeting would continue to be the public forum for discussion, but any warrant article would be put on the ballot," Jenkins said. "This would provide all voters with an opportunity to have their say."

Town meeting voters will now decide the next step for the CCT article. Even if the town approves the measure, the biggest obstacle will come at the state level. Jenkins said the article must be approved by an act of the Legislature. Jenkins said she is not certain that the Legislature would approve the CCT article.

"A lot of people feel the taxpayers should not vote on these kinds of matters because that's what elected and appointed officials are for," Jenkins said. "But it's our money. We're trying to return the power of the purse to the taxpayers. This is just one more way to get people involved in town government."
